The Centre for Rural Studies, IIPA, New Delhi decided to have a data bank on the Panchayati Raj and is perusing its attempt in this direction. In the meanwhile the idea of 'Reviewing the Panchayati Raj Acts in the context of Proposed Constitutional Amendment' was conceived some times in the July 1989 when the 64th Constitutional Amendment Bill was introduced in the Parliament. The Centre, with a detailed Research Proposal approached the Department of Rural Development, Ministry of Agriculture, Government of India, which found favourable response from the Department. After several rounds of discussion with Ministry Officials a consensus emerged that at the initial stage the study may be conducted in select eight states i.e. Andhra Pradesh, Bihar, Gujarat, Haryana, Karnataka, Madhya Pradesh, Uttar Pradesh and West Bengal. However, the formal approval of the Department of Rural Development was received by the Institute sometimes in March 1990. After the recruitment of the Research Staff the study was finally taken up in July 1990.

Towards completion of this study we received valuable help and cooperation from various organizations and individuals. We shall be failing in our duties if we do not record our appreciation for them.

First and foremost thanks and appreciation are due to the Department of Rural Development, Ministry of Agriculture, Government of India, for not only approving the study but also sanctioning generous grants. Special thanks are due to Shri S. Shankaran, Secretary, Department of Rural Development, Smt. Sarla Gopalan, Joint Secretary, Shri A.M. Gokhale, Joint Secretary and Dr. N.J. Kurian, Director for their help and cooperation. We are particullly indebted to Shri A.M. Gokhale who always spared time for discussion and benenfitted us by his invaluable suggestions and comments at different stages of the study. Any account of praise will be belittling his valuable cooperation.

We are highly indebted to our Director Shri P.K. Umashankar, who throughout acted as friend, philospher and guide to us. His keen interest and valuable suggestions helped us to a great extent in shaping the things in present form. Words are inadequate to express our heartfelt thanks to Shri Umashankar.

We sincerely acknowledge the administrative support provided by Dr. Brij Bhushan, Registrar of our Institute. His friendly advice from time to time proved to be an academic input to the study. We express our gratitude to him.

The officials of select states of the study i.e. Andhra Pradesh, Bihar, Gujarat, Haryana, Karnataka, Madhya Pradesh, Uttar Pradesh and west Bengal are the natural claimants of our thanks, we really very much appreciate their help and cooperation. They not only took care of stay of the Research Team and Providing transport but also spared time for discussion with the Research Team. But for their help and cooperation the study perhaps has not been completed.

We are equally thankful to the Peoples' representatives of the select states, who not only replied to our pointed queries but also provided valuable suggestions through their critical comments on the problem. We sincerely acknowledge their help and cooperation with all sincerity.

We find ourselves in dilemma as how to acknowledge the services of our Research Staff Dr. (Mrs.) Kushal Kaushik, Dr. Suresh Mishra and Mrs. Anita A. Srivastava. But for their sincere and hard work it could have been very difficult for us to complete the study. Any amount of thanks will be too little for the services rendered by them.

Finally we would like to record our appreciation for Shri Surendra Pal Sharma and Mrs. Durupati who typed the odd pages of manuscript with all sincerity and dedication. Last but not the least, thanks are also due to Shri G. S. Negi and Shri Girish Joshi who put hard work and got the Report ready on Word processor.

CHAPTER - I

INTRODUCTION

The term 'Local self-government' and 'Local Government' are synonymous. The controversy regarding their use is dead now. What is important is to analyse the elements of a local self-government system.

In general, local self-government may be said to involve the conception of a territorial, non-sovereign community possessing the legal right and the necessary organisation to regulate its own affairs. This in turn presupposes the existence of a local authority with the power to act independently of external control as well as the participation of the local community in the administration of its own spheres that is, a local self-government has the following attributes: (a) territory, (b) population bound together by a sense of community and (c) a governmental organization which is responsible and responsive to the needs and wishes of the local community. But the government is not sovereign, it is subordinate to superior authorities of the country. The powers and jurisdiction of a local self-government authority are limited and its functions within limits laid down by the law of the country. Within such limits it has autonomy in regard to the exercise of its powers and the discharge of its functions and duties.

The basic units of a local self-government system are generally based on a distinction between urban and rural population i.e., villages and towns. The distinction between them can not only be explained in physical terms but also in terms of social psychology, social attitudes, and habits. Physical factors such as density of population per acre, organized provision of services and social amenities are important since they have a direct bearing on social psychology and attitudes. All these factors combined build up a sense of community. The sense of community is a very important factor since it is the basis of loyalty of an individual to the place of his residence. The individual develops a feeling of love and affection for his locality.

We may divide the history of local self-government in India into three fairly distinct periods. The first period which may be taken to have started with the setting up of a local authority in Madras ended in 1882. Lord Ripon's Resolution of 1882 is the beginning of the second period. The Reforms of 1919 marked the commencement of the third period. The year 1947, when India became independent, does not start a new period since the system continued to be the same. The history of local self-government during its first period is not only characterized by absence of local self-government in the accepted sense of the term but it also gives us an idea of the attitude of the people towards local self-governing institutions. The attitude was one of active hostility in 1862, it under-went some change as years rolled on. The people were also unwilling to pay direct taxes and so indirect taxation had to be introduced. Lack of adequate degree of interest on the part of the people in civic affairs and unwillingness to pay taxes for municipal improvements are still there. These are thus chronic problems with which we have still to grapple.

The unwillingness of the people to pay taxes was due to the fact that they did not understand the purpose. In the North-Western provinces in the early years of the British rule the Magistrate found it usually easier to persuade the leading citizens to make arrangements for the construction of drains or other works themselves. They would cooperate if they could see their money laid out in bricks and mortar, whereas they would resist strongly a tax whose purpose they did not understand. In Bareilly the inhabitants rose in revolt against the tax proposals, and had to be put down by the military.

The second period - this period starts with the announcement of the Government of India Resolution on Local self-government in 1882. In 1881 the Resolution on Provincial Finance had invited "the local (Provincial) Governments to undertake a careful scrutiny of provincial, local and municipal accounts with the view of ascertaining: (1) What items of receipt and charge can be transferred from 'Provincial' to 'Local' heads for administration by committee comprising non-official, and wherever possible, elected members; and what items already 'local' but not so administered, might suitably be so; (2) What redistribution of items is desirable in order to lay on local and municipal bodies those which are best understood and appreciated by the people; (3) What measures, legislative or otherwise are necessary to ensure more local self-government. Incidentally to the scrutiny they will probably notice and might carefully consider; (4) ways of equalising local and Municipal Taxation throughout the Empire, checking severe or unsuitable imports and favouring farms most in accordance with popular opinion or sentiment." Lord Ripon's government addressed circulars to provincial governments on the subject of local self-government. It was on the basis of particulars collected in pursuance of the above mentioned circulars that the Government of India framed its famous Resolution of 1882. The Local Bodies Act of 1885 reflects the validity of Ripon's policy which actually paved the way for decentralised Local self-governing institutions down to the village level.

Lord Ripon who was perhaps alone in his liberalism looked at the problem of local self-government in distinctly different light. He thought that political education and administrative efficiency should be put into perspective. He regarded local self-governing institutions as instruments of political and popular education.

The next land-mark is the Report of the Decentralisation Commission which was set up in 1907 to enquire into the financial and administrative relations of the Government of India and the Provincial governments and of 'authorities subordinate to them' and to report 'whether by measure of decentralisation or otherwise' the system of government could be 'simplified and improved.' It submitted its Report in 1909. Their recommendations were sound but cautious, conceived in terms of administrative improvement, rather than of national political aspirations.

The Decentralisation Commission emphasised the importance of village organization, insisted on universal establishment of Taluka and Tehsil Boards as the 'principal agencies of local government,' suggested measures to strengthen financial resources of rural boards, favoured continuance of District Magistrates as chairmen of District Boards and various other measures.

These recommendations were whittled down in process of transmission into the Resolution of 1915. By the time this Resolution was issued the proposals became out of date in view of the State of national political aspirations. The Government of India set to work to evolve an advanced policy which came to be embodied in the Resolution of 1918.

The Third period - The years 1918-20 were a period of waiting. The Constitutional Reforms were announced. Preparations were started for implementing new reforms. Local self-government was a transferred subject under Dyarchy and to be placed under the charge of a Minister. The constitution of local authorities were further democratised.

Local self-Government was set-up by an order of the President of India in order to review the problems of local self-Government of the entire country and to co-ordinate ideas relating to local self-Government. Again, the government of India has been convening the conferences of Municipal Corporations since 1959. These conferences are attended by the Union Minister for Health, Mayors and Commissioners of all the Municipal Corporations in India. There is also an all-India Panchayat Parishad with branches in States. This is a non-official body created to promote the interests of the Panchayat Movement. These bodies, the Central Council of Local self-Government and the conference of Municipal Corporations, have been doing useful work.

The Government of India is alive to the question of the integrated approach and appointed a Rural-urban Relationship committee to suggest a new structure which will enable local authorities to cope up with the problems arising from economic development, and consequent urbanization at a rather rapid pace. Such a periodical examination of the structure of local self-Government will be necessary in future. It is demand of the rapidly developing science and technology.

During this period serious attention has been paid to the problem of rural local self-Government. Mahatma Gandhi and other top leaders of the Indian National Congress had always been emphasising the need of paying greater attention to the problem of the villages. Framers of the Constitution of India laid it down as a duty of the government to organise self-government institutions at the village level. The Congress which came to power in the states and in the Union Government took up the matter in right earnest. Necessary legislations were passed and village panchayats have come to be established all over the country.

The re-organisation of local self-government system in rural areas has been long overdue. The municipal authorities were first set up in urban areas. The government of India Resolution of 1882 for the first time directed local governments to set up rural boards similar to municipal boards. It further directed that the unit of administration should be small - the sub-division, tehsil or taluka. Next came the report of the decentralisation commission which had been appointed in 1907 to enquire into the financial and administrative relations of the Government of India and the provincial governments and of 'authorities subordinate to them' and to report 'whether by measure of decentralisation or otherwise' the system of government could be 'simplified and improved'. It submitted its Report in 1909. The Commission for the first time emphasised the importance of village organisation, and insisted on universal establishment of Taluka and Tehsil Boards as the 'principal agencies of local government'. These suggestions and directions were modified by provincial governments. Villages continued to be neglected. Tehsil or Taluka Boards were not strengthened. Instead, District Boards were retained as principal local self-governing institutions in the rural sector.

District Boards were hardly adequate for purposes of local self-government. The jurisdiction of a district board coincided with that of a revenue district - a unit created long ago for purpose of land revenue administration and police administration. The area and the population of a district made it impossible for it to acquire necessary cohesion and vitality for functioning as an effective institution. The States started taking over many of the functions of the district boards. On the other hand, Gram Panchayats were set up. These two powerful forces (a) provincialisation of several functions of district boards and (b) growth and development of Gram Panchayats brought about a situation in which district boards could not be continued for long. The introduction of Community Development Programme forced the issue of the reorganisation of rural local self-government system.

After independence for Community, development through community participation was envisaged. And two programmes Community Development and National Extension Services were launched in 1952 and 1953 respectively but they failed to achieve their development objectives, because of the facts the plans formulated were based on percolatory concept of development and non-participatory concept of development. The whole programme revolved round trickled down theory. However, proposals of the Planning Commission for the Second Five Year Plan stressed the need for creating within the district a well organized Democratic Structure of Administration in which Village Panchayats would be organically linked with popular organizations at higher levels. The proposal was subsequently taken up by the Study Team appointed by the Committee on planned projects and was presided over by Balwant Rai Mehta which submitted an elaborate report in 1957.

The Mehta Study Team realizing the importance of popular participation recommended creation of institutions which were to be statutory, elective, comprehensive in duties and functions, equipped with necessary executive machinery with adequate resources and with enough autonomy and freedom. The creation of Panchayati Raj in 1959 with the object of interesting the authority and responsibility for rural development to rural people was held not only as an innovation but also as a revolution.

Three Tier system for self-government at the grass root level was recommended by the Study Team and three major tasks viz., developmental, administrative and political were assigned to these institutions. However, these institutions could not flourish due to short sightedness and another due to lack of political will. As a matter of fact at the time of introduction of C.D. programmes and National Extension Services a great blunder was committed. Before infrastructures for the implementation of these programmes could be created, the programme was launched. The B.D.O.'s and their subordinate staffs were sent to rural areas and were required to hire the buildings for office purposes and search for the houses for their own residences. The local elites grabbed this opportunity by renting out a few big complexes for the office purpose and provided free accommodation to the field level staff including the B.D.Os. This resulted into developing collusion between the local level bureaucracy and local elite. At the time of introduction of Panchayati Raj Institutions the local level bureaucracy tried to pay in return to the local elites by providing elected posts of these institutions through their manipulative tactics. As a result, in the initial stage itself these institutions, instead of becoming the units of popular participation, became the citadel of local influentials for grinding their own axe.

Moreover, as these institutions took a shape the M.L.As, M.L.Cs and other politicians came, to realize the strategic importance of P.R. Institutions and started looking at representatives of these institutions as their political rivals. As a consequence, the decline of these institutions started taking place. The performance and objectives of P.R. Institutions were considerably diluted leaving them in the state of directionlessness. The declining political support coupled with indifferent attitude of local level bureaucracy further led diminution of the developmental and administrative role of Panchayati Raj Institutions adding insult to the injury.

The basic philosophy behind Panchayati Raj Institutions was to ensure people's participation in development programmes which was expected to unleash the arrested process of change and development. However, these institutions failed to a great extent on both the accounts due to their non-performance. Still it had a perceptible impact in terms of galvanizing the average citizen in rural India and wherever it took its roots, it helped in narrowing the gap between the bureaucracy and the people.

In such a situation, and changing scenario at the National level by way of Janata Party coming to power, again a Committee was appointed under the chairmanship of Ashok Mehta to suggest ways and means for reviving Panchayati Raj Institutions. Diagnosing the ills afflicting the Panchayati Raj Institutions the Committee pointed out that haphazard programmes, non-performance, rise of vested interest, lack of political will on the part of Central and State Govts., lack of adequate financial resources etc. positively contributed to its decline. At the same time Panchayati Raj itself got lost in the haze of conflicting interpretations.

In this background the Committee reviewed the past and presented its recommendations having thrust on functional necessity for decentralisation of administration. It was called 'new approach to Panchayati Raj'. However, it may be pointed out that the Committee perceived the philosophy or approach to Panchayati Raj in somewhat narrow terms. The recommendations of Committee give a feeling that Panchayati Raj is a mere administrative contravene whose jurisdiction lies only in terms of rural development. It would have been more welcomed if Panchayati Raj or rural local government were regarded like its counter-parts at the State and Central levels as a system of government having a measure of autonomy in the matter of functioning and existing in its own right. The major recommendations of the Committee are two tier model of Panchayati Raj i.e., Zilla Parishad and Mandal Panchayat, direct election to both Zilla parishad and mandal panchayats, reservation of seats for scheduled caste and scheduled tribes in proportion to their population and women (2 seats) who get the highest number of votes in Panchayati Raj elections. Apart from this, encouraging Committee system at both the levels, treating M.L.As and M.Ps as an outsider having no right to vote, formal participation of political parties in panchayati raj elections, Zilla parishad being the first point of decentralisation are some of the additional major recommendations.

In regard to functions of Panchayati Raj Institutions the Committee suggested that it should not be water-tight compartment, scope for frequent adjustments and readjustment of functions may be there. Apart from professionally qualified planners the district planning may involve peoples' representatives, creation of justice committee to provide social justice with chairman belonging to schedule caste/schedule tribes was a unique feature. It also recommended for the separate Panchayati Raj cadre for class III and class IV employees. More financial power to Panchayati Raj Institutions and more functional autonomy, holding of regular elections, creation of Nyaya panchayats etc. were also added in the recommendations.

It is difficult to disagree with the major recommendations of Ashok Mehta Committee. However, at that time itself and even now a question is being frequently asked whether the Central and the State governments are genuinely interested in making Panchayati Raj a success.

One demerit of Ashok Mehta Committee recommendation was that Gram Sabha was made a major casualty.

On the lines of the recommendations two State governments, Andhra Pradesh and Karnataka experimented with the model. However, it is painful to note that before the model could take its roots in the respective states, the changed State governments are attempting to dilute the model.

A Committee under the chairmanship of G.V.K. Rao was again set up to examine the administrative arrangements for rural development. Apart from other issues one of the important matters before the Committee was to study the role of P.R. bodies and their relationships with the proposed administrative set-up.

While examining the role and genesis of P.R. Institutions in historical perspective, the Committee looked into the factors which were responsible for the decline of their status.

With a view to activate the P.R.s the Committee gave several useful suggestions. District being the Prime Unit for overall planning in development, it suggested to strengthen the Zilla Parishad by introducing a system of sub-committees constituted on the basis of proportional representation. It further suggested even transferring of some of the planning functions at the district level. To achieve the ideals of participatory democracy, it envisaged holding the local elections regularly.

Yet a Committee was appointed under the chairmanship of eminent lawyer, L.M. Singhvi in 1986. On the recommendations of this Committee the 64th Constitutional Amendment Bill was introduced in Parliament. The Sarkaria Commission which submitted its report in 1988 on Central State relationship also emphasised restructuring the popular institutions at the grassroot level.

Looking into the functioning of different models of Panchayati Raj some of the issues emerged in different context. In the context of Karnataka, the question is whether it is a Cabinet form of government. or a Mayor in council form? What is the relationship between the chairman and the Chief Secretary? Whether the post of Chief Secretary is a misnomer? Whether there will be a party system within the Zilla Parishad?, and whether the chairman and vice-chairman have executive power? Moreover, the concept of four pillar State as proclaimed by the Karnataka Govt. seems to be a wishful thinking as it requires constitutional guarantee.

In the context of Andhra Pradesh it may be asked whether Mandal is too big a unit to be managed meaningfully? What should be the relationship between D.R.D.A. and Panchayati Raj Institutions? Would there be a conflict between Adhyaksha Zilla Parishad and D.M. on the one hand and Adhyaksha Zilla Parishad and Minister incharge of the concerned district on the other?

Though West Bengal model continued to be based on the old model of three tier and supposed to be the most successful experiment made so far. However, the interference of political parties and their dominance on the Panchayati Raj bodies leave a big question mark whether there is real participation of people in the functioning of Panchayati Raj Institutions?

Maharashtra and Gujarat model though supposed to be very good models yet they are not free from their own problems for example in Maharashtra the Zilla Parishad is most important. But its worth and significance lies in its linkages with cooperatives and State government thus giving it a status of a sub-capital rather than as the most important top most tier in Panchayati Raj.

In case of Gujarat in nut-shell it can be said that as the process of Panchayat decay are eclipsing the phenomena of panchayati development, the panchayati raj in Gujarat has lost its earlier thrust, clan and capacity to realise the goals envisaged for the Panchayati Raj as grass roots democracy and a new medium of development and social change.

In regard to the status and functioning of Panchayathi Raj Institutions in remaining states has not shown any encouraging trend and in these States they virtually function on paper.

Whatever experiments we may have with Panchayati Raj Institutions and may adopt different models to strengthen these institutions, there remain to be some of the basic questions which have not yet been answered. They are as follows:

- (1) What does the concept of decentralisation mean in Indian context?
- (2) Is there any conflict between democracy, decentralisation and development as the three basic goals of decentralised democracy?
- (3) Should the institutions of democratic decentralisation be treated as development mechanism or a power mechanism providing a hierarchical chain of political offices through which the actual political power can be exercised?
- (4) What type of relationship should these institutions have with national and State political organisations?

In regard to the efficacy of Panchayati Raj Institutions certain questions may be raised viz. Do these patterns of centralised democracy involve the decentralisation of political or administrative powers or do they merely lead to the transfer of certain governmental functions to the local authorities? How far the institutional organization and administrative arrangements been successful in promoting harmonious working relationships among the officials and elected members of political organs? Has there been adequate inter-institutional, inter-departmental coordination among different components of decentralised system to facilitate an effective planning and execution of development plans at local level?

The problems raised above indicate the crux of the realities being faced by P.R. Institutions and in this background the past experiments with PRIs and proposed 64th and 74th Constitutional amendments could be looked and examined.

However, inspite of subsequent introduction of the proposed constitutional bills in parliament the question still left to be answered are:

As to what extent the proposed amendment bills will help the P.R.Is in becoming an effective instrument of grass root democracy?

Whether the State Govts. will gladly allow the encroachment on their autonomy by the Centre?

Whether the powerful and dominant sections will allow the SC/STs and women to participate effectively in decision making process? However, these are none of the concerns of the present study. These problems may be looked into by having another independent study. As desired by the Department of Rural Development, Ministry of Agriculture, Govt. of India, our concern here is to look into the existing P.R. Acts of eight States: (Andhra Pradesh, Bihar, Gujarat, Haryana, Karnataka, Madhya Pradesh, Uttar Pradesh and West Bengal), and based on the review, to suggest what changes are required in the existing Acts of the P.R.Is of select states.

Objectives of the Study:

In the broader historical and problematic framework the basic objectives of the present study are as under:

1. To review the existing statutory provisions in regard to Panchayati Raj of some selected states;
2. To examine the existing administrative structure in relation to Panchayati Raj Institutions; and
3. In view of the above objectives to suggest suitable amendments in existing Acts to bring them in conformity with the proposed Panchayati Raj Amendment Bills 1989 and 1990.

Selection of the States of Study:

After having a detailed discussion with the senior officials of the Department of Rural Development, Govt. of India, it was decided that the study may be conducted in following eight states: Andhra Pradesh, Bihar, Gujarat, Haryana, Karnataka, Madhya Pradesh, Uttar Pradesh and West Bengal.

Methodology:

For the present study we have adopted the method of historical research as also the field method. The primary source of information consists of the existing Acts of select states and proposed constitutional Amendment Bills (now lapsed). They have thoroughly been reviewed, bottlenecks detected and analysed in the framework of the objectives of the study. However, to have a realistic exposure to the problem we decided to interview the Government officials at the State Secretariat level dealing with P.R. Departments as also the people's representatives and knowledgeable persons available on the spot in the State capitals for interaction. Some of their suggestions helped us to a great extent to shape the things in the present shape. Finally, a field diary was also maintained which proved invaluable at the timing of report writing. The data so collected, compiled, scrutinised and properly analysed forms the core of the study.

In the light of above framework the study has been coached in subsequent five chapters. While chapter II give a comparative analysis of two Constitutional Amendment Bills i.e. 64th & 74th, chapter III deals with the review of existing Panchayati Raj Acts of the select states. Chapter IV gives an account of officials' perception of the Panchayati Raj in their respective states. What the impression the Research Team gathered on the basis of field diary and method of observation has been analysed in chapter V. As usual chapter VI deals with the recommendations put forward by the Research Team for the Consideration of Government of India.

CHAPTER - II

CONSTITUTIONAL STATUS TO PANCHAYATI RAJ: COMPARATIVE ANALYSIS OF CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT BILLS

Constitution is a combination of legal norms of highest order in a country governed by the rule of Law. The normative standing of the constitutional commands are unquestionable because of its invoidability. However, the other varieties of norms emanating from the different sources like legislative authorities, subordinate legislations and individual administrative orders are always bound to conform to the constitutional requirements for their legality and validity. Therefore, the Constitution stands on the top of the hierarchical legal order. This legal truism seems to be one of the strong reasons behind the demand to constitutional status to the institutions of vital public importance. According Constitutional status to the Panchayati Raj Institutions (PRIs) seems to be encouraged by the above consideration.

In our constitutional scheme of Parliamentary democracy, the creation of Panchayati Raj Institutions and their organisation was, however, left to the general directives embodied in Article 40 of the Constitution. The Constitutional directive in Article 40 is that "the State shall take steps to organise Village Panchayats and endow them with such powers and authority as may be necessary to enable them to function as Units of Self-government". The inclusion of Article 40 as a Directive Principle of State Policy is in no way more than the accommodation of conceptual view point. Though it is not a mandatory and an integral operating part of the Constitution but it does manifest constitutional recognition of Village

Panchayats as units of self-government. True significance of Article 40 lies in its mandate that panchayats should be endowed with "such powers and authority as may be necessary to enable them to function as units of self-government." The emphasis of this Constitutional requirement is to strengthen PRIs, structurally and operationally, to function as an effective institutions of grass-roots democracy for development, welfare, freedom, liberty, justice and dignity of man. However, the past experiences in regard to the functioning of the PRIs established and regulated by the state legislations in different states have revealed that they have not been allowed, generally speaking, to function in consonance with the Constitutional spirit of self-government. It is evident from the statement of objects and reasons of both the Constitution Amendment Bills 64th & 74th of 1989 and 1990 that in many states Panchayati Raj Institutions have become weak and ineffective owing to the reasons, such as, the failure to hold regular and periodical elections, prolonged supersession, inadequate representation of the weaker sections like the Scheduled Castes, the Scheduled Tribes and Women, lack of financial resources and inadequate devolution of powers and responsibilities to them. To remedy these ills, inter-alia, both the constitution Amendment Bills were moved though not succeeded in taking the shape of the integral part of the Constitution. The objective of this chapter is to analyse the provisions of 64th and 74th Constitution Amendment Bills of 1989 and 1990 with a view to find out similarity and dissimilarity in approach of Legislative drafting for conferring constitutional status to PRIs.

SIXTY-FOURTH AMENDMENT BILL-1989

The Constitution Sixty-fourth Amendment Bill was introduced in the Lok Sabha in July 1989 to provide Constitutional status to Panchayati Raj institutions. The draft Bill makes the establishment of Panchayati Raj Institutions mandatory. This is the first attempt by any Government to confer a Constitutional status to the PRIs. In order to understand the merits and demerits of the bill, it is necessary to examine the provisions of the Bill. The Bill was intended to insert part IX in the Constitution dealing with Panchayats.

Constitution and Composition (243a, 243b)

The Amendment Bill provides for a uniform three tier structure of Panchayati Raj in every State at the village, intermediate and district level. However, panchayats at the intermediate level may not be constituted in a state having a population not exceeding twenty lakhs. The legislature of a state may by law make provision with respect to the composition of panchayats, subject to the provisions of this part. All the seats in the panchayats shall be filled by persons chosen by direct election. The Panchayats area shall be divided into territorial constituencies in such manner that the ratio between the population of each constituency and the number of seats allotted to it shall so far as possible, be the same throughout the Panchayats area.

The legislature of a state may by law provide for a representation in such manner and subject to such condition as may be specified in such law regarding the Chairpersons of the panchayats at the village level. Similar is the case with the chairperson of a Panchayat at the intermediate level and at the district level. The state legislature shall also decide regarding the representation of the members of the house of the people, and the members of the legislative assembly of the state representing constituencies wholly or partly of a panchayat area.

However, the Bill provides that the chairperson of a panchayat and other members of a panchayat chosen by direct election from territorial constituencies in the panchayat area shall alone have the right to vote in the meetings of the panchayats.

The chairperson of a panchayat at the village level shall be chosen by election in such manner as the legislature of a state may provide. At the intermediate level or the district level the chairperson shall be elected by, and from amongst the elected members. The Bill provides for the procedure for removal of the chairperson of a panchayat who has been elected by and from amongst the elected members of the panchayats, meaning that it shall not apply to the village level panchayat. The prescribed procedure is that no resolution by the panchayat for removing him from the office of the chairman shall be valid and effective unless such resolution has been passed by a majority of not less than two-thirds of such members present and voting.

Reservation of Seats (243C)

Reservation of seats have been made for the Scheduled Castes and the Scheduled Tribes in every panchayat in proportion to their population. However, where their population is not sufficient for reservation of any seats, one seat for the S.C or as the case may be, one seat for the S.T shall be reserved in the panchayat. Out of the total seats reserved for SC/ST 30% shall be reserved for women belonging to these groups. In case only two seats are reserved, then one should be in favour of SC/ST women as the case may be. The State legislature may provide for the reservation of office of chairpersons (other than the reservation for women).

Women have also been given adequate reservation. As nearly as 30% of the total number of seats (including seats reserved for SC/ST women) to be filled by direct election in every panchayat, shall be reserved for women and allotted by rotation to different constituencies in a panchayat.

Tenure (243D)

The term of panchayat is to be of five years unless dissolved earlier under any law for the time - being in force. In case the panchayats are dissolved earlier, then fresh elections are to be held within six months from the date of dissolution. The reconstituted panchayat shall continue only for the remainder of the period for which the dissolved panchayat would have continued. Moreover, in case such period is less than six months it is not necessary to hold elections for constituting the panchayat.

Powers and responsibilities (243E)

The legislature of a State may endow the panchayats with such powers and authority as may be necessary to enable them to function as institutions of self-Government and such law may contain provisions for the devolution of powers and responsibilities upon panchayats at the appropriate level.

Taxes and Funds (243F)

The Bill provides that the State legislature may by law authorize a panchayat to levy, collect and appropriate such taxes, duties, tolls and fees levied and collected by the State Government for such purpose. It also provides for making such grants-in-aid to the panchayats from the consolidated fund of the State and for constituting of such funds for crediting all moneys received.

Finance Commission (243G)

The Government of a State within two years from the commencement of the Sixty-Fourth Amendment Act 1989 and thereafter at the expiration of every fifth year, Constitute a Finance Commission to review the financial position of the panchayats and to make recommendations to the Governor, as the principles which should govern the determination of taxes, tolls etc., distribution of finances between the state and the panchayats, the Grants-in-aid to the panchayats from the consolidated state funds and any other matter in the interest of sound finance of the panchayat.

It is for the State legislature to determine the qualifications which shall be required for appointment as members of the Commission and the manner in which they shall be selected. The Commission shall have such powers as the legislature of a State may confer on them. Every recommendation of the Finance Commission together with an explanatory memorandum as to the action taken thereon be laid before the legislature of the State. It is the duty of the Governor to ensure the same.

Accounts and Audit (243H)

The accounts of the panchayats shall be kept in such form as the Governor may, on the advice of the Comptroller and Auditor-General of India, prescribe. The Bill also provides that the Comptroller and Auditor-General shall determine the method of auditing of the panchayat accounts and such reports shall be duties, tolls and fees levied and collected by the State Government for such purpose. It also provides for making such grants-in-aid to the panchayats from the consolidated fund of the State and for constituting of such funds for crediting all moneys received.

Finance Commission (243G)

The Government of a State within two years from the commencement of the Sixty-Fourth Amendment Act 1989 and thereafter at the expiration of every fifth year, Constitute a Finance Commission to review the financial position of the panchayats and to make recommendations to the Governor, as the principles which should govern the determination of taxes, tolls etc., distribution of finances between the state and the panchayats, the Grants-in-aid to the panchayats from the consolidated state funds and any other matter in the interest of sound finance of the panchayat.

It is for the State legislature to determine the qualifications which shall be required for appointment as members of the Commission and the manner in which they shall be selected. The Commission shall have such powers as the legislature of a State may confer on them. Every recommendation of the Finance Commission together with an explanatory memorandum as to the action taken thereon be laid before the legislature of the State. It is the duty of the Governor to ensure the same.

Accounts and Audit (243H)

The accounts of the panchayats shall be kept in such form as the Governor may, on the advice of the Comptroller and Auditor-General of India, prescribe. The Bill also provides that the Comptroller and Auditor-General shall determine the method of auditing of the panchayat accounts and such reports shall be submitted to the Governor of the State, who shall ensure that they are laid before the legislature of the State.

Conduct of Elections (243I, 243J)

The superintendence, direction and control of the preparation of electoral rolls for, and the conduct of, all elections to the Panchayats shall be vested in the Election Commission. However, the Bill provides that subject to the provisions of this part, the legislature of a State may from time to time by law make provision with respect to all matters relating to, or in connection with, elections to the Panchayats.

Jurisdiction (243K, 243L)

The Bill states that the provisions of this part shall apply to the union territories. The President is empowered to direct that the provisions of this part shall not be applicable to union territories.

However, nothing in this part shall apply to the states of Nagaland, Meghalaya and Mizoram, Scheduled Areas referred to in clause(1), tribal Areas Clause (2) of the Article 244, the Hill Areas of Manipur, the Hill Areas of the District of Darjeeling in West Bengal. Notwithstanding anything in this Constitution the legislature of a state referred to in sub-clause(a) of clause (1), may by law extend this part to their state.

Continuance of Existing Laws (243M)

Any provision of any law relating to panchayats inforce immediately before the commencement of the Constitution 64th Amendment Act 1989 which is inconsistent with the provisions of this part shall continue to be inforce until amended or repealed or until the expiration of one year from such commencement, which ever is earlier. All the panchayats existing immediately before such commencement shall continue till the expiration of their duration, unless sooner dissolved by the State legislature.

Further the Amendment Bill enumerates the functions and powers to be devolved on the panchayats. These are put in the Eleventh Schedule of the Constitution and are listed.

SEVENTY-FOURTH AMENDMENT BILL 1990

After the defeat of the 64th Amendment Bill on the floor of the Rajya Sabha due to serious apprehensions regarding the timing and the intention of the Bill, the National Front Government introduced in the Lok Sabha on 4th September 1990 a new Amendment Bill known as the Constitution Seventy Fourth Amendment Bill 1990. The Bill was to insert a new part after part VIII of the Constitution. This part shall deal with the local authorities. However, as our study confines to only rural local Government we shall only deal with the Panchayats in our analysis.

Gram Sabha (243A)

The seventy-fourth Amendment Bill recognises the importance of a Gram Sabha. It states that a Gram Sabha may exercise such powers at the village level as the legislature of a State may provide by law.

Constitution and composition (243B, 243C)

In every State Panchayats at the village level shall be constituted in accordance with the provisions of this part. It is left to the Legislature of a State to provide for the Constitution of Panchayats at other levels. Subject to the provisions of this part the State Legislature may make provisions with respect to the composition of panchayats. It also provides that all seats in a panchayat at the village level and not less than fifty percent of the seats in a panchayat at any other level if any, shall be filled by persons chosen by direct elections from territorial constituencies in the Panchayat area.

The Legislature of State may provide for the representation in such manner and subject to such conditions as may be specified, of the chairpersons of the panchayats at the village level or of the panchayat, if any, at the other level in the panchayat at the immediately next higher level. The Chairperson of a panchayat shall be chosen by election in such manner as may be prescribed by the legislature of a State.

Reservation of Seats (243G)

In every panchayat seats shall be reserved for the Scheduled Castes and the Scheduled Tribes and the number of seats so reserved shall be in proportion to their population. The Bill further provides that not less than one-third (including seats reserved for SC/ST women) of the total number of seats to be filled by election in every panchayat shall be reserved for women and allotted by rotation to different Constituencies in the Panchayat. The legislature of a State may make provisions for reservation of seats in any panchayat in favour of any backward classes of citizens.

Powers and authority (243H)

Subject to the provisions of this Constitution, the legislature of a state may by law endow the panchayats with such powers and authority as may be necessary to enable them to function as institutions of self-Government.

Tenure (243 I)

Every panchayat, unless dissolved under any law for the time being in force shall continue for five years and the expiration of the said period of five years shall operate as a dissolution of that panchayat. Where a panchayat is dissolved before the expiration of its duration an election to constitute the panchayat shall be completed within six months from the date of such dissolution. If the remainder of the period for which the dissolved panchayat would have continued is less than six months, it shall not be necessary to hold any election under this clause to constitute the panchayat. The reconstituted panchayat shall continue only for the remainder of the period for which the dissolved panchayat would have continued had it not been so dissolved.

Finance Commission (243J)

From the commencement of the Constitution seventy-fourth Amendment Act 1990, within a year and thereafter at the expiration of every fifth year a Finance Commission shall be constituted to review the financial position of the panchayat and to make recommendation to the Government of the state as to the principles which should govern the distribution of finances between the State and the panchayat, the determination of taxes, duties, tolls and fees, the grants-in-aid to the panchayat from the consolidated fund of the state and any other matter referred to the Finance Commission by the Government of the State in the interest of sound finance of the Panchayats.

The legislature of a State may provide for the composition of the Commission, the qualifications for appointment as members and the manner in which they should be selected. The Commission shall determine their procedure and shall have such powers in the performance of their function as the legislature of a State may confer on them. The recommendation made by the Finance Commission shall be laid by the Government of the State before the legislature of the State together with an explanatory memorandum as to the action taken.

Conduct of Elections (243K)

The legislature of a State may make provisions with respect to all matters relating to, or in connection with elections to the panchayats subject to the provisions of this constitution.

Jurisdiction (243L, 243M)

The provisions of this part shall apply to the Union Territories and the President may direct that the provisions of this part shall not apply to any Union Territory. The Bill further states that nothing in this part shall apply to the Scheduled Areas referred to in clause (1) and the tribal areas referred to in clause(2) of Article 244. Further no part shall apply to the states of Nagaland, Meghalaya and Mizoram and the Hill areas of Manipur and of Darjeeling in West Bengal. The legislature of state may extend this part in so far as it relates to panchayats to that state except the areas referred to in clause(1). The Parliament may extend the provisions of this part to the Scheduled Areas and the Tribal Areas referred to in clause (1).

Continuance of Existing Laws (243N)

Any provision of any law relating to panchayats inforce in a State immediately before the commencement of the Constitution Seventy-Fourth Amendment Act 1990 which is inconsistent with the provisions of this part shall continue to be inforce until the expiration of one year from such commencement or until the expiration of the longest duration of the panchayat at any level existing in the state immediately before such commencement, whichever is later. All the panchayats existing immediately before such commencement shall continue till the expiration of their duration, unless sooner dissolved by a resolution passed to that effect by the legislative assembly of the state.

Disqualifications (243O)

A person shall be disqualified for being chosen as and for being a member of the panchayat or a Committee if he holds office of profit under the Government, local bodies or a Committee. He is also liable for disqualification if he is of unsound mind, an undischarged insolvent, not a citizen of India and if disqualified as to under any law. In case of dispute the matter shall be referred to the Governor.

Interference by Courts (243P)

The validity of any law relating to the delimitation of constituencies or the allotment of seats to such constituencies made or purporting to be made under Article 243 K shall not be called in question in any court. Secondly, no election to any panchayat or Committee shall be called in question except by an election petition presented to such authority and in such manner as may be provided by the legislature of a State.

COMPARATIVE ANALYSIS OF THE BILLS

In the light of the experience in the last forty years and in view of the shortcomings which have been noticed, it has been recognised that there is a need to enshrine in the constitution a chapter dealing with the panchayats. The proposals contained in the Constitution 64th and 74th Amendment Bills are important for the development of the Indian polity and a dispassionate analysis of the implications of the Bills is called for. At present the panchayats have not been able to develop as responsive peoples bodies due to a variety of reasons including absence of regular elections, prolonged supersession, inadequate representation of weaker sections, insufficient devolution of power and lack of financial resources. Here we have examined the provisions of the Bills.

1. Gram Sabha

The 74th Amendment Bill has restored the pivotal role of Gram Sabhas. It has been recognised that it is the primary source of democratic power in a village. The Bill provides for a Gram Sabha which may exercise such powers at the village level as the legislature of state may, by law provide. On the other hand the 64th Bill does not mention about Gram Sabha.

2. Constitution of Panchayats

The 64th Bill makes it obligatory for all states to establish a three tier system of panchayats at the village, Intermediate and district level. However, states having a population of less than twenty lakhs would not be obliged to establish panchayats at the intermediate level. Whereas the 74th Bill provides for a single tier of panchayats at the village level to be constituted in every state and the legislature of a state may by law provide for the constitution of panchayats at other level or levels.

3. Composition of Panchayats

According to the 64th Bill all the seats in a panchayat shall be filled by persons chosen by direct election from territorial constituencies in the panchayat area. However the 74th Bill provides that all the seats in a panchayat at the village level and not less than fifty percent of the seats in a panchayat at any other level, if any, shall be filled by persons chosen by direct election from territorial constituencies in the panchayat area.

4. Reservation of Seats

Both the Bills provide for identical reservation of seats for the SC/ST candidates. They differ on the percentage of seats to be reserved for women candidates. The 64th bill reserves as nearly as thirty per cent of the total seats to be filled by direct elections in every panchayat for women and allotted by rotation to different constituencies in a panchayat. The 74th Bill provides that not less than 1/3rd of the total number of seats to be filled by election in every panchayat shall be reserved for women and allotted by rotation to different constitutencies in a panchayat.

According to the provisions of the 74th Bill state legislature can reserve seats for Backward Classes in a panchayat.

5. Duration of Panchayats

Both the Bills provide for a duration (term) of five years for the panchayats. The election to constitute a panchayat when dissolved shall be held within a period of six months; the reconstituted panchayat shall function for the remaining period that the dissolved panchayat would have continued.

6. Finance Commission

Finance Commission has been provided in both the Bills but with a difference. The 64th Bill provides that the Governor of a state shall constitute a finance commission to review the financial position of the panchayats, and to make recommendations to the Governor who shall cause every recommendation made by the finance commission together with an explanatory note thereon to be laid before the legislature of the state. On the other hand the 74th Bill states that there shall be a finance commission in every state to make recommendations to the Government of the state and such recommendations shall be laid by the Government of the state before the legislature of a state together with an explanatory note.

7. Audit of Accounts

The 64th bill provides for the form of audit of panchayat accounts. The bill states that the accounts of the panchayats shall be kept in such form as the Governor may, on the advice of the Comptroller and Auditor-General of India prescribe and the reports shall be submitted to the Governor of the state who shall cause them to be laid before the legislature of the state. Where as the 74th Bill does not provide the form or manner of audit of panchayat accounts.

8. Conduct of Elections

According to the provisions of the 64th Bill the superintendence, duration and control of the preparation of electoral rolls for, and the conduct of, all elections to the panchayats shall be vested in the election Commission where as the 74th Bill states that the legislature of a state may make provisions with respect to all matters relating to, or in connection with elections to the panchayats. It does not provide for an election commission.

9. Disqualification of Members

The 74th Bill provides for the grounds on which a person shall be disqualified for being chosen as a member of the panchayat. This provision does not exist in the 64th Bill.

10. Interference by Courts

The 74th Bill provides that the validity of any law relating to the delimitation of seats or the allotment of seats to such constituencies shall not be called in question in any court. The 64th Bill does not bar the courts from interference.

Thus we can conclude that the 64th Amendment Bill had sought to strengthen centralisation through holding PRI elections under the supervision of the Central Election Commission, auditing of PRI accounts by the Comptroller and Auditor General. It has been apprehended that the Central Government through Governor as its representative intended to have control over Panchayati Raj Institutions.

On the other hand the 74th Amendment Bill does not intend the Centre's intervention in the areas connected with panchayats. Each state will appoint its own election commission to supervise elections. The Finance Commission will also be constituted by the states. Thus the federal structure of the constitution has been maintained and strengthened. Besides, the plenary legislative power of the state legislatures under item 5 of State List of Seventh Schedule has been given due importance and respect in the interest of State autonomy.

An Overview

To give meaning to the constitutional message of the Directive Principles of the State Policy contained under Article 40, that Panchayats should be endowed with "such powers and authority as may be necessary to enable them to function as units of self - government" the local self - government has been kept under entry 5 of State List of Seventh Schedule. Meaning thereby, the legislative competence of the state legislature has well been recognised for development of Panchayati Raj Institutions to operate as institutions of self-governments, at the grass-root level. The approach of the State Governments, as revealed at operational level seems to be far from proclaimed constitutional ideal.

To strengthen the Panchayati Raj Institutions to function as effective instrument of democracy and development thereby as instrument of social transformation has been the subject matter of discussions at the national as well as the state level. Some states like Karnataka, Andhra Pradesh, Gujarat etc. have enacted legislations with the idea to devolve more financial and administrative powers. However the approach in all the states is not similar. The idea to confer constitutional status to Panchayati Raj Institutions to provide stability and uniformity was also discussed and debated. The recommendations of the Singhvi Committee (1986) was in favour of conferring constitutional status to it. However the Sarkaria Commission (1988) on centre-state relations has said" to rectify this dysfunctioning of the local self governing bodies it is necessary to ensure by legal provisions analogous to those in Article 172 and 174 of the constitution, that the elections to and sessions of Zilla Parishads and Municipal Corporations are held regularly and these institutions do not remain suspended for long periods. The power of enacting such a law vests under Entry 5 List II exclusively with states. Uniformity in these aspects of the law throughout the territory of India is essential. The uniformity can be secured by adopting, in the following order of preference, any of the alternatives given below:-

- (i) By laws with respect to this matter made by all the state legislature in accordance with a model bill prepared on the basis of consensus at the forum of the Inter-state council (Inter-Governmental Council, recommended by us to be established under Article 263).
- (ii) By a law on this subject made by Parliament under Article 252 (1) with the consent of the legislatures of all the states.
- (iii) By a Parliamentary law uniformly applicable throughout India containing provisions analogous to Article 172 and 174 of the Constitution.

Adoption of alternative (i) or (ii) will not require any amendment of the constitution. However as a condition precedent for adopting alternative (iii), those aspects of the matter which are analogous to Article 172 & 174 will have to be carved out of the ambit to Entry 5, List II and transposed as a separate item to List III.

We recommended that in order to ensure that elections to sessions of Zilla Parishad and Municipal Corporations are held regularly and these institutions do not remain superseded for long periods, any one of the alternatives (i), (ii) and (iii) be pursued in the order set out above. Recourse to alternative (iii) may be had only as a last resort when attempts to follow alternatives (i) and (ii) fail or are otherwise found unfeasible" (Report of Commission on Centre-State Relations, Part I, Page 544).

A glance at the discussion on the provisions of the 64th Bill in the Lok Sabha reveals mainly two lines of arguments. First, that the Panchayati Raj Institutions should be conferred constitutional status. The proponents of this idea advocate the concept of 3 tiers of federal polity, and suggest that Panchayat Raj should be brought under the constitution. Another line of argument with the same purpose, is that the "state" defined under Article 12 of the Constitution includes, inter-alia the Union Parliament, therefore the Parliament is under Constitutional obligation to confer constitutional status to Panchayati Raj Institutions. The second line of argument is that it will affect the autonomy of the states and finally destroy the federal structure of the Constitution. To strengthen the second line of argument some of the Parliamentarians have made Kesavananda Bharti AIR 1973 SC 1461, a judgement of the Supreme Court, a basis. In Kesavananda Bharti, federal structure, inter alia, was considered one of the basic features of the Constitution and placed outside the purview of the amending powers of the Parliament under Article 368.

Besides, these diagonally opposite view points, there were other political and factual factors which made foundered the passing of the 64th Bill. The factors may be summarised as below:-

1. The Bill was introduced at the fag end of the tenure of the Lok Sabha. The choice of the timing for introduction of the Bill raised eyebrows and genuineness of the effort.

2. The Bill was introduced amidst the controversy of allegation of corruption against public men occupying high positions.
3. It was introduced when the political party piloting it was not having requisite majority in the Rajya Sabha.
4. It was introduced without any effort to evolve national consensus. Rather writing letters by the P.M. to the Gram Pradhans and providing central assistance (J.R.Y.) to them has further aggravated the situation of distrust and a climate of suspicion was created. The slogan of the then ruling political party "Power to the people" was understood by a considerable number of people as a means to acquire "power to the party".

It may therefore be concluded that the fate of 64th Bill had already been fettered, even before its foundering. The 74th Bill died its natural death since 9th Lok Sabha was dissolved on the 13th March 1991. However, the Panchayati Raj as a technique of decentralisation for administrative reforms has prominently appeared in the election manifestoes of all most all political parties during the election of 10th Lok Sabha. There is strong possibility that the issue of conferring Constitutional Status to Panchayati Raj Institutions will receive a top priority on the national agenda because the Congress party, the originator of 64th Constitution Amendment Bill, has occupied the reign of power at the centre.

CHAPTER - III

PANCHAYATI RAJ: LEGISLATIVE FRAMEWORK

Legislation by the Legislature within its Legislative Competence is one of the major steps in translating the Constitutional aspirations. The Legislative provisions, to some extent, manifest political and administrative commitment, sensitivity and enthusiasm. Panchayati Raj as a subject of Legislation in the Constitution comes under Entry 5 of List-II of the VII schedule wherein the Legislative jurisdiction of the Legislatures of States have been recognised. Panchayati Raj Acts, therefore, are the product of state Legislatures. The object of this chapter is to give a comparative, comprehensive and compact account of the major basic features of the Panchayati Raj System as obtain in the States under study and also to present salient features of individual state Acts. The Panchayati Raj Acts operating in different states are as follows:

- |                   |   |  |
|-------------------|---|--|
| 1. Andhra Pradesh | - | A.P. Gram Panchayat Act 1964                                   |
|                   | - | A.P. Mandals Praja Parishad and Zilla Praja Parishad Act 1986. |
| 2. Bihar          | - | Bihar Panchayat Raj Act, 1947                                  |
|                   | - | Bihar Panchayat Samities and Zilla Parishad Act 1961.          |
| 3. Gujarat        | - | Gujarat Panchayats Act 1961                                    |
| 4. Haryana        | - | Punjab Gram Panchayats Act 1952                                |
|                   | - | Punjab Panchayat Samities and Zilla Parishad Act 1961.         |

- |    |                |   |   |
|----|----------------|---|---|
| 5. | Karnataka      | - | Karnataka Zila Parishads, Taluk Panchayat Samities, Mandal Panchayat and Nyay Panchayats Act, 1983. |
| 6. | Madhya Pradesh | - | M.P. Panchayat Raj Act, 1990  |
| 7. | Uttar Pradesh  | - | U.P. Panchayat Raj Act 1947.  |
|    |                | - | U.P. Kshettra Samities and Zila Parishad Act, 1961.   |
| 8. | West Bengal    | - | West Bengal Panchayat Act, 1973.  |

COMPARATIVE ANALYSIS

1. Structure

The states of Andhra Pradesh, Bihar, Karnataka, Madhya Pradesh, Uttar Pradesh, and West Bengal have a three tier Panchayat structures at the Village, Intermediate and District level. Haryana has a two tier Panchayat structure at the Village and the Intermediate level. On the other hand Gujarat has a four tier model at the Village, Nagar, Intermediate and District level.

2. Gram Sabha

Gram Sabha is provided in all the Panchayati Raj Acts of the states except that of West Bengal. However, powers, functions and the duties assigned to the Gram Sabha varies. There is no uniform requirement for holding the number of meetings of the Gram Sabha. Since Gram Sabha is the unit structure of local self government its role and effectiveness needs to be recognised.

3. Elections

Elections under the state supervision is held in each state to fill the seats in the Panchayats. Madhya Pradesh, Andhra Pradesh and West Bengal allows the participation of the political parties in the elections. However, it is only Madhya Pradesh where the Gram Panchayat elections are held on a party basis and is direct. In other states the Pradhan or the Sarpanch is chosen by direct election where as the other office bearers at the intermediate and district level are chosen through an indirect election. However, Madhya Pradesh Act provides for direct elections at all the three levels.

4. Term of Office

The Panchayati Raj Acts of Andhra Pradesh, Gujarat, Haryana, Karnataka, Madhya Pradesh, Uttar Pradesh and Bihar provide for a five years term. The term of Panchayats in West Bengal is of four years.

5. NYAYA PANCHAYATS

In order to settle petty disputes at the village level Nayaya Panchayats exist in the states of Uttar Pradesh, Gujarat, Andhra Pradesh, West Bengal and Karnataka. Gram Kutchery in Bihar, Adalati Panchayat in Haryana and Conciliation Boards in Madhya Pradesh.

6. Reservation

Reservation is provided to ensure participation of SC/ST and women in all the states. Reservation to SC/ST candidates is in proportion to their total population. The Act of Karnataka provides for 25% of the seats to be reserved for women. Karnataka and Andhra Pradesh also provide reservations to the members of Backward Communities. Reservations of seats for women is provided in all the Panchayat Acts. To ensure their participation if they are not represented in the Panchayats women candidates are to be coopted thus ensuring their presence in the panchayats. Of late, Bihar has provided for a 30% reservation of seats to women by way of amending its Act in January 1990.

7. Funds

In regard to creating funds for Panchayats, as per the provisions, in all the eight select states they should be mobilised through various ways such as donations, contributions, tolls, levies, taxes and could be utilised towards various activities taken up by the Panchayats.

8. Government Powers

The Government has the power to suspend, supersede or dissolve the Panchayats after giving due opportunity for explanation. However, in practice these norms are not maintained in some of the states. The life of Panchayati Raj Institutions depend on the whims and fancies of the state Governments.

9. Budget and Meeting

The Panchayat Acts of the select states provide that the Panchayats shall prepare the Budget of the income and expenditure for the next financial year and forward it to the next higher tier for approval. As regards meetings, the Acts of Uttar Pradesh, Gujarat, Andhra Pradesh, Bihar and Karnataka provide for at least two meetings in a year. The Acts of Haryana, Madhya Pradesh and West Bengal provide that atleast one meeting shall be held every month. A line may be added that the provisions in Haryana, Madhya Pradesh and West Bengal are more promising in comparison to other states. However, the realities are different from the provisions.

10. Powers and Functions

The distribution of powers and functions among the Panchayats is quite clear in all the Acts. The states like Karnataka, Gujarat, Madhya Pradesh, West Bengal and Andhra Pradesh have given certain additional powers to the Panchayats in matter relating to development.

11. Audit of Accounts

To check corruption and misuse of funds all the Panchayat Acts provide for the audit of panchayat accounts by the state machinery.

12. Finance Commission

Karnataka and Bihar provides for a Finance Commission to regulate the distribution of funds between the State Government and the Panchayats and between the Panchayats themselves.

13. Election Commission

Bihar amended Panchayati Raj Act in 1990 and incorporated the provision of a Election Commission under state supervision to conduct Panchayat elections and perform other functions related with Panchayat elections.

It is to be noted that Bihar has made needful amendments in its Act as per the provisions of the 64th Constitutional Amendment Bill 1989. While amending the Act in 1990 the state has taken special care in preserving its autonomy and keeping Panchayati Raj Institutions exclusively within its planery powers.

ANDHRA PRADESH GRAM PANCHAYATS ACT 1964

Title

S.1. This Act may be called the Andhra Pradesh Gram Panchayats Act 1964.

CHAPTER - IV

OFFICIALS' PERCEPTION OF PANCHAYATI RAJ INSTITUTIONS

In the present chapter an attempt has been made to present the opinion of officials as to what they perceive about the functional utility of Panchayati Raj Institutions in their respective states and how they conceive the usefulness of two proposed constitutional amendments in regard to restructuring and strengthening of the Panchayati Raj Institutions. It was thought proper because of the fact that the government functionaries, working at the field level, may have the better knowledge about the functioning of Panchayati Raj Institutions and their view points may help us to shape the things in proper perspective. But unfortunately, on our field visit, we could not get the desired cooperation from the officials in the sense that hardly one percent officials, after filling up our printed questionnaires, returned it to us and remaining nintynine percent assured that they may send it by post within a fortnight. But unfortunately, till the writing of the Report no filled up schedule has been received by us. However, we succeeded in our mission to some extent in the sense that during the period of the study our Institute organised two Training Programmes namely 'Development Through Participation' for district level functionaries engaged in rural development programmes and Panchayati Raj Institutions. We served our questionnaire and then got it returned in complete form during the completion of Training Programme itself. Putting together the opinion of the participants of Training Programme and a few responses from the field, we got the responses of 30 officials. Our questionnaire included both opinionative and fixed answer questions. The replies of the respondents to our fixed answer questions are presented at the end of the chapter in tabular form. The reply of the questions which were opinionative in nature are presented statewise in explanatory form.

Andhra Pradesh

First of all we wanted to know about official's awareness of the 64th Constitutional Amendment Bill and its basic features. The respondents, though small in number, expressed their awareness about the Bill and had some vivid memory of ideals and the objectives of the Constitutional Amendment Bill and rationale behind it. They were of the opinion that the proposal was good in the sense that it provides for regular elections to the Panchayati Raj Institutions and provision for the Finance Commission for Panchayati Raj. In regard to the rationale they had to mention that since the State governments were not taking keen interest in seeing P.R. Institutions a success, the central government by clothing Panchayati Raj Institutions with legal sanctity attempts to provide constitutional legitimacy to them.

When asked 'whether the P.R. Act of the concerned State was satisfactory', respondents, by and large, were not satisfied with the Act in the sense that in their opinion P.R. Institutions had no financial power which came in the way of speedy and effective implementation of development programmes. Their other reaction was that no government department at the district level was under the control of Zilla Parja Parishad/Mandal Praja Parishad and at the same time there were frequent changes in the Act which made P.R. Institutions ineffective leaving them like a person whose hands and legs are tied. They further pointed out that apart from having little administrative powers over various development departments, the Panchayati Raj Institutions require sufficient financial devolution.

After knowing the deficiencies of the existing Act, we wanted to know their reactions in regard to the plus points of the proposed amendments. The points the respondents made are: provision for periodic elections, increase in powers, controls on the functionaries, provision for sufficient financial resources and election within six months if at all P.R. Institutions are superseded.

However, in regard to elections, they had to suggest that there should be direct elections upto Mandal level but preferred for indirect election at Zilla Praja Parishad level. Explaining other points, they said that elections should be regular feature, clearcut statutory powers to P.R. Institutions and regular flow of finance should be the redeeming features.

To a deeper query as to whether rules framed by state government, sometimes, make P.R. Institutions ineffective. Their spontaneous reply was 'yes', this is a regular feature. Instructions in regard to rules are issued frequently which handicap P.R. Institutions to function effectively. They further said that the rules may be framed only when they are highly essential and that too on the recommendations of P.R. bodies.

Again we wanted to know whether in rule making process peoples' participation is essential, particularly with regard to effective implementation of such rules? In this context they referred that as far as possible effective participation of local bodies in rule making process should be a must. Before the rules are finally formulated such proposal must be placed before the peoples' representatives to know their reactions.

In regard to ensuring people's participation, they were of the opinion that people's participation can not be ensured if we depend only on their representatives. For that matter Gram Sabha should be made effective instrument of change and development. The implementation of rural development programmes at the field level has raised many eyebrows and the vexing problem is whether it should be left entirely in the hands of bureaucracy or P.R. bodies or both should work hand in glove to see better results? In this context the reply of the respondents was that all developmental activities should be put at the disposal of the middle tier of P.R. Institutions i.e. Mandal Praja Parishad.

There is a general feeling that local level bureaucracy is mainly responsible for making these Institutions ineffective. As such, we wanted to know whether it was a fact and if yes, what could be the reason? The reaction of the respondents was that bureaucracy may not be entirely blamed for the situation. The real problem is that middlemen create major problems. The moment the middlemen are removed from the implementational scene most of the problems would be automatically solved.

In regard to taxation power of P.R. Institutions, we wanted to enquire as to what type of taxes P.R. Institutions could impose? Officials were of the opinion that taxes like house tax, professional tax, land revenue, minerals, cess, registration and stamp duties may be collected by P.R.Is.

After knowing the reaction of respondents on the above mentioned queries, we attempted to solicit their opinion on anything additional to be incorporated in P.R. Act in their State. They were of the opinion that for review purposes some departments like excise, revenue, commercial taxes, forest, agriculture, animal husbandry etc. should be brought under the preview of Zilla Praja Parishad/Mandal Praja Parishad.

In regard to the coordination problem among the three tiers of P.R.Is, they suggested that there should be a clearcut understanding and coordination both vertical and horizontal within the tiers of P.R.Is. They further suggested that coordination is also required between the P.R.Is on one hand and local level bureaucracy on the other particularly in regard to implementation of different rural development programmes. For that matter the Mandal Praja Parishad should have a clear and definite knowledge of all the implementational works being taken up at the Mandal level. In regard to coordination at the district level, they had to suggest that there should not be any interference by the district administration in the activities of P.R. Institutions.

When we wanted to know whether P.R. Elections should be held by Central Election Commission or the State should conduct it? Their quick reply was that the State election machinery is sufficient to conduct and manage the P.R. elections.

In regard to administrative control in existing P.R. system, they were of the opinion that the district administration must be under the control of P.R. and there should be effective control by the P.R.Is over all the development functionaries working at the District and the Mandal levels.

In regard to the qualifications of the members of Gram Sabha and functions of Gram Sabha, they had to say that all the adult members of the village should be the member of Gram Sabha and all the matters, developmental and otherwise, may be placed before the Gram Sabha. It may have a detailed discussion over specific issues and a final consensus decision is taken which may be implemented by the Gram Panchayat. But, they were also quick to point out that at the present moment Gram Sabhas are in very bad shape and they hardly meet in proper sense of the term. They suggested that some immediate steps must be taken to activate Gram Sabhas and to make them an effective instrument of grass roots democracy.

In regard to the communicational channel to maintain proper communication system, they had to suggest that at the village level Sarpancha should be the main person who should inform Mandal president about the activities of the Gram Sabha and at the Mandal Praja Parishad level the President may be held responsible for communicating at the district level to the chairman Zilla Praja Parishad. Accordingly, the information in regard to Government policies and new schemes may be communicated to the President Mandal Praja Parishad by the Chairman Zilla Praja Parishad and to the Sarpancha of Village Panchayat by the President Mandal Praja Parishad.

In regard to the size of the Gram Sabha, they had to suggest that the maximum size of the Gram Sabha should be 2000 adult members. In regard to the quorum in the meetings of Gram Sabha they had to put a minimum ceiling of 20% and they had to further suggest that at least three meetings of Gram Sabha must be arranged in a year.

If we look into the statements made by the respondents, one thing is clear that some of the suggestions are quite valuable and the proposed constitutional amendments to a certain extent have taken care of those problems.

Finally, we wanted to know the reactions of the people's representatives in regard to the usefulness and preference for two proposed Constitutional Amendment Bills, they (particularly the Chairman Zilla Praja Parishad), clearly mentioned that though they belong to Telgu Desham Party but they had to confer that the 64th Constitutional Amendment Bill was more elaborate, exhaustive and intended to give real power to the P.R. Institutions. In concluding remarks they had to mention that with slight modifications they would like to go for the 64th Constitutional Amendment Bill. But what should be the 'Slight Modification' that was not mentioned by them.

Bihar

In Bihar Sachivalaya, the Research Team met the officials of the Directorate of P.R. and served the questionnaire on the officials concerned with a request that it may kindly be filled up. After an hour's discussion with officials they said that their opinion will be discussed and finalised in the meeting and a composit response may be sent to the Research Team by registered post. Though the officials did not oblige the Research Team by giving on spot interviews but they were prompt enough to send their view points within a fortnight in typed form. After looking into their typed reply, we are of the impression that the replies covered only the convenient questions and inconvenient question have deliberately been left out.

In regard to P.R. elections they were of the opinion that they should be held regularly and in time. If it could not be held due to some unavoidable reasons, the office bearers be allowed to continue till the next elections are held. We are of the opinion that such a vague reply was due to the fact that the P.R. Elections in Bihar could not have been held for the last 12 to 13 years and the old functionaries of P.R. are continuing to their posts.

In regard to supersession of P.R. bodies the reply was that supersession ordinarily should not be favoured. However, the Govt. should have the power to supersede P.R. Institutions if they do not function or discharge their duties as assigned under the Act.

In regard to the representatives of P.R. Institutions being on Finance Commission, they had to say that it has been proposed and accepted in Bihar. They were in favour of State P.R. Finance Commission and said that it should be constituted in right earnest and may be authorised to make positive recommendations for strengthening resources of P.R. Institutions and the same may be considered by the State Government. An inference can be drawn from this statement of the officials that they might not be familiar with the details about State Finance Commission under proposed Constitutional Amendment Bills.

In regard to the powers and functions of P.R.Is their reply was that they have been given sufficient power under the Bihar State Panchayati Raj Act and further suggested that regular inspections and audit should be made to see that they function properly. From their reply, two inference could be drawn viz. these officials treated P.R. Institutions as government organization and not as an institution of grass root democracy, second that the bureaucracy in Bihar tries to put its hegemony over the P.R. Institutions. They further emphasised that P.R. Institutions should be under the direct control and supervision of State Government and there should not be any interference by the Central Government, this was in reply to the question whether P.R. Institutions be put under the concurrent list?.

In regard to a query as to how P.R. Institutions could be strengthened, they were prompt enough to mention that on the lines of proposed amendment bills suitable amendments have already been made in the P.R. Act of Bihar and no further change was required in amended Act of Bihar. (The Bihar P.R. Act was amended in Nov. 1989 on the lines of 64th Amendment Bill).

As regards bureaucratic structural changes in the light of proposed amendments, the officials reply was that a separate cadre of officers and employees may be created exclusively to look after the functioning of P.R. Institutions top from the district down to village level. So created bureaucratic set up should not be given any additional work except for the works related to P.R. Institutions.

But, surprisingly the officials had no idea that the proposed 64th Constitutional Amendment Bill provides for three tier structure of P.R. Institutions for major states. In regard to the reservation of seats on P.R. bodies for SC/STs and women they said that the proposed Constitutional Amendment Bill envisaged such reservations but they failed to give the exact percentage of reservation proposed.

In regard to auditing of P.R. accounts, a question was put that 'whether the P.R. accounts be audited by the Comptroller and Auditor General of India or the State should have the power to get it audited through its own machinery'? In reply to this question they said that there was no need for getting it audited by the Comptroller and Auditor General of India. Rather they suggested that the State Government has a separate audit organization under the Comptroller and Chief Accounts Examiner of the Bihar P.R. Act provides auditing by the same agency and this is scientific and satisfactory.

In regard to holding the P.R. Elections through Central Election Commission they had to say that to ensure timely elections and smooth running of election machinery it would be better to put P.R. elections at the disposal of Central Election Commission.

A question which has generated a lot of heat and fire by the State Governments is that accepting the 64th Amendment Bill by the State Government is to allow Central Government to encroach upon the State autonomy. And as such, we wanted to know the reaction of the State officials on this point. The officials in their reply were very positive and said that it will not infringe upon the autonomy of the State rather it will provide an opportunity to maintain perfect coordination and understanding between the Central and the State Governments on the one hand and State and P.R. Institutions on the other.

These are official's statements in response to our printed questionnaire. However, based on the impressionistic study the Research Team is of firm view that the officials of Bihar were not fully acquainted with the P.R. Act. This was substantiated by the informal discussion of Research Team with the Director, Panchayati Raj. He was in the rank of Joint Secretary, State Government, having a Law Degree to his credit. When the Research Team started probing the Director P.R., he said that he can talk about C.R.P.C., I.P.C. and other aspects of law but he can not say anything in regard to P.R. Act because it was beyond his understanding.

However, one good point was noticed that Bihar is perhaps the only State which has incorporated the basic features of 64th Constitutional Amendment Bill in its P.R. Act duly amended in Nov. 1989.

Gujarat

Though Gujarat is supposed to be one of the best States so far as effectiveness of P.R. Institutions was concerned. When the Research Team visited the State capital and discussed the issue with the Minister P.R., Chief Secretary, Secretary P.R. and other officials, they explained in detail in regard to strength and weaknesses of P.R. Institutions in Gujarat. However, when we supplied to them our printed questionnaire and elicited their response to those questions, they simply said that the questionnaires will be filled up in leisure hours and after completion, the same be sent back to the I.I.P.A. by post. But the Research Team till the time of writing the Report has not received the filled up questionnaires by the officers. It may be that in view of their detailed discussion with Research Team they might not have filled up the questionnaires. The out come of the discussion with the officials and the impression of the Research Team have been presented separately in the chapter 'Field notes and observation.

Haryana

The Research Team served the questionnaire on State level officials in the Secretariat in Chandigarh. In regard to the first query as to what is the basic difference between the two Constitutional Amendment Bills i.e. 64th and 74th Constitutional Amendment Bills. The reply on this query given by the officials gives an impression that the officials either did not follow the question or had no knowledge in regard to both the proposed Constitutional Amendment Bills. For example, their reply was: (i) Reserving seats for SC/ST and women, (ii) Decentralized planning and (iii) giving more powers to P.R. Institutions in planning, implementation and monitoring of the Government programmes. If one looks into the items mentioned by them he would find that all these provisions are there in both the proposed Constitutional Amendment Bills, then what was the difference?

The next question put to them was in regard to free and fair elections of P.R. Institutions and Strategy to achieve the objectives of free and fair elections. Their immediate response was that under the existing provisions there were scope of manipulations in P.R. elections and sometimes bureaucracy was blamed for showing special favour to the party in power in the State. To remove this impression and maintain free and fair elections, it should be conducted by the Central Election Commission.

Much talked about provision under both the proposed Constitutional Amendment Bills is provision for State Finance Commission and its Composition. They welcomed this idea and suggested that like Central Finance Commission every State should have its own Finance Commission.

A Deeper probe was made as to whether the creation of State Finance Commission will improve the financial condition and thereby the working of P.R. Institutions?. They replied in affirmative and said it will not only improve the financial position of P.R. Institutions but also help bring efficiency in functioning of P.R. Institutions. Further elaborating the point they said that the State Finance Commission may allocate funds to the Zilla Parishads/Districts on the basis of the backwardness of the district and as such, there will be a regular flow of funds top from the district down to the village, quickening the process of development.

A supplementary was put as to whether P.R.Is should have their representation on the State Finance Commission. They said 'Yes', at least one P.R. representative must be the member of State Finance Commission. The selection of the members should be on the basis of Election from amongst the members of Zilla Parishads.

In regard to the functioning of P.R. Institutions there have been a chronic problem of getting P.R.Is superseded. As such, we wanted to knowr whether P.R.Is be superseded and if yes, under what circumstances? Their reply to this query was that, yes, provision should be there for supersession of P.R. Institutions. But they should be superseded under very special circumstances. For example, if the P.R. representatives fail to act as true representative of the people and developmental activities come to a halt. Secondly, if there is any misappropriation of P.R. funds in such circumstances they may be superseded. However, in case of supersession, elections must be held within six months from the date of supersession and a new Panchayat must be constituted.

We wanted to know as to whether women should have reservation on P.R. bodies'? by and large, the officials were of the opinion that 20% seats on different P.R. bodies may be reserved for women.

In regard to the present arrangement for women on P.R. bodies they said that at the present moment women are co-opted by the Gram Panchayat. This co-option practice should be stopped forth with and there should be provision in the Act for direct election of women for different P.R. bodies.

A question related to administration was asked that if all the developmental works were put at the disposal of P.R. Institutions, what should be the role of District Administration? On this query the respondents were of the opinion that the District Administration may act as a guide and supervisor of P.R. Institutions. The District Administration should motivate the rural masses to contribute positively in the functioning of P.R.Is by way of their effective participation, and by way of participating in planning and implementation and monitoring of various development programmes.

Coming to the problem of coordination we wanted to know 'what should be the coordinating mechanism to coordinate the activities of the three tiers i.e. Panchayat Samities and the Zilla Parishads of P.R. Institutions. In reply to this they had to suggest that at the village level the perfect coordination and understanding between the Panchayats and various functionaries of different development departments should be a precondition. At the block level coordination is required between Panchayat Samities/Block Samities and block level officers. It should be both horizontal and vertical. At the District level coordination between the Zilla Parishad and officers of various departments is a must. For this purpose a coordination committee at all the three levels must be constituted and the committee must meet regularly to sort out the problems coming in the way.

The most vexing problem is how to activate Gram Sabhas? On this problem we wanted to solicit the opinion of the State government officials. They were of the opinion that to make Gram Sabha more effective there should be a provision of audit of various works done by the Panchayats. Plan projects should be the duty of Gram Sabha and selection of beneficiaries should be left entirely in the hands of Gram Sabha.

We further wanted to know as to whether Haryana Panchayat Act has any provision for making Gram Sabha effective? Their reply was in Haryana Gram Panchayat Act there is provision for at least two meetings of Gram Sabha but practically speaking these meetings hardly take place and if at all such meeting takes place it is in most unorganised manner.

To make rule making more democratic what actions were required was our next query. In reply to this the officials were of the view that before rules are formulated consultation with P.R. representatives should be a must.

Madhya Pradesh

The new of BJP government in Madhya Pradesh has recently made sweeping changes in its Panchayati Raj Act and as claimed by the officials this new Act of Madhya Pradesh may prove to be the most effective and action-oriented in the country. The officials with a great enthusiasm were preparing for holding the P.R. elections at the time of the study team visited the state capital. Apart from the Secretariat level officials, the study team also interviewed some district level officers responsible for P.R. administration. In reply to the query as to whether they were familiar with the two Constitutional Amendment Bills in regard to P.R.Is? The officials replied that they were very much familiar and further added that the proposal of giving P.R.Is a Constitutional status is a right step in right direction but this step may affect the autonomy of the State.

In regard to the existing arrangements for holding P.R. Elections and their adequacy or inadequacy the respondents said that the existing arrangements for conducting P.R. Elections had not been so ineffective. To some extent, the machinery have been able to conduct fair and impartial elections. However, agreeing with the provisions of the Bills they stated that to make election machinery effective and meaningful there should be an independent constitutional body (Election Commission) to conduct the P.R. Elections. In regard to the composition of this Commission they stated that it should be on the patterns of State Election Commission.

Coming to the provisions for Finance Commission and representation of P.R. bodies on it, we wanted to know the reactions of officials on this issue. They were emphatic of the view that one representative of P.R. Institutions must be there on State Finance Commission to place the problems and requirements of P.R.Is before the other members of Commission.

In regard to the problem as to whether P.R. accounts be audited by the Comptroller and Auditor General of India, the respondents did not share this view and stated that it should be left to the State governments and the concerned States may get the P.R. account audited through their own machinery.

The most criticised aspect of P.R.Is is the frequent supersession of P.R. bodies by the State government. As such, we wanted to know the reactions of government officials on this issue. The officials said that in Madhya Pradesh there is no such problem, however, they said that the State government should have the political will to get regular and periodic elections of P.R. Institutions materialised and there should not be any statutory provision of holding the elections of superseded P.R. bodies within six months from the date of supersession.

We further asked that under what circumstances P.R.I. should be superseded? They simply pointed out that the reasons on which the P.R.Is could be superseded have already been incorporated in the P.R. Act 1990 of Madhya Pradesh.

They further mentioned that provision should also be there to suspend the P.R. representatives on the grounds of misconduct, embezzlement and irregularities. On a supplementary put by us as to who should suspend them, the respondents replied that the collector from Gram Panchayat to Janpad level and the State Govt. at the Zilla Parishad level should have powers to suspend such members.

After that we wanted to know as to whether women should be given reservation on P.R. bodies. In reply to that they said that they favour reservation for the women on P.R. bodies and further added that in Madhya Pradesh P.R. Act of 1990 such provisions have already been made. In regard to tier system in P.R., we wanted to know that whether they would like three tier system or two tier system? The officials replied that for Madhya Pradesh they have already opted for three tier system and to their mind, this system is most effective. In regard to the tenure of P.R. they said that 5 years term is the ideal one for P.R. On their own they suggested that the appointing and controlling power of bureaucracy attached to P.R.Is should entirely be in the hands of P.R.Is. They preferred a separate bureaucratic cadre right from the district down to village level for P.R.Is.

We wanted to know that if the proposed Constitutional Amendment Bills are passed the entire developmental functions will be discharged by the P.R.Is. On this aspect of the problem what was their reaction? The officials replied that in that situation only regulatory and law- order functions should be in the hands of district administration. However, they added that efforts should be made in the direction of ensuring coordination between the district administration and P.R. administration. When put a supplementary as to how this coordination be maintained the officials said that functional linkages will take care of the problem.

Lastly we wanted to know how to make Gram Sabha an effective instrument of P.R. system. In reply to this question the respondents pointed out that ensuring regular meetings of Gram Sabha may make it effective.

Further we wanted to know about the rule making practices under P.R. system. They said that rule making was not a problem in their state and whatever rules were formulated they used to get prior consent of P.R.Is.

Karnataka

In its first leg of field study the Research Team visited the state capital of Karnataka (Bangalore) and elicited the opinion of Govt. officials in regard to the functioning of P.R. system of Karnataka. The officials were interviewed with the help of structured and guided questionnaire. The first question was put to the officials as to whether they had any idea of 64th Amendment Bill? The officials response was that major rural development departments including rural electricity (which was left out in Karnataka P.R. Act) have been included in the bill.

To our query as to what was the reason behind the introduction of 64th Constitutional Amendment Bill? The officials replied that the basic reason behind the bill was to give autonomous status to P.R. On the point of difference between the two Amendment Bill i.e. 64th and 74th, they had to say that there was no fundamental change except for the fact that 74th Amendment Bill has tried to maintain that autonomy of the states in regard to P.R.I.

In regard to present election system and their limitations the officials pointed out that the interest of the minorities have been overlooked whereas the proposed Bills take care of that. In regard to the drafting of a new Act and incorporation of some new provisions they said that indirect elections for the higher tiers with reservation at the topmost by rotation should be there. P.R. Institutions should be encouraged to mobilize their own resources for which genuine assistance and guidance be provided by the State.

When we asked who should conduct P.R. elections? The officials said that an independent statutory body i.e. Election Commission should conduct the P.R. Elections.

In regard to status, composition, powers and functions of Finance Commission, the officials replied that some Government officials, economists and some renowned politicians with clean image be appointed as members of the Finance Commission. If such provisions are made, only then the Finance Commission will be in a position to improve the financial condition and thereby working of P.R.I.

To a query as to who should audit the Panchayati Raj accounts?, the officials replied that giving audit to the agency like the Comptroller and Auditor General of India is perfectly alright.

Under what circumstances the P.R.I be superseded was our next query. The officials out spokenly said that on the charges of corruption they may be superseded. When we asked 'Are you satisfied with the present provisions for supersession?', the officials said 'No'. Giving details the officials further said that at the present moment P.R.I. are superseded on political grounds.

In reply to the query of rule making power of State legislature for P.R., the officials said that before the rules are framed they should be evaluated at all the tier levels and after getting the approval of P.R.I, the rules should be framed.

To a supplementary as to how people's participation could be ensured? the officials said that it could be ensured by encouraging, educating, and giving expectations in regard to sharing the benefit of development programmes and by way of activating Gram Sabhas.

In regard to developmental activities, we wanted to know from the Government officials as to whether all the development works should be left at the disposal of the Panchayati Raj Institutions?. The officials, by and large, were of the opinion that the proposition is not bad, however, they added that before the entire developmental works are handed over the Panchayati Raj Institutions, proper administrative and physical infrastructure should be created at all the three levels i.e., Mandal/Taluk and District levels. This will help in quickening the process of implementation.

In regard to the question of women's participation, the officials said that since women constitute nearly fifty per cent of the population and they are subject to subjugation, to bring back them to the mainstream, their participation should be encouraged. They further stated that keeping this fact in view the Karnataka Panchayati Raj Act provides for 25% of seats reserved for women. However, they were quick to add that despite this reservation women's participation on Panchayati Raj bodies is not taken seriously. Even the elected women representatives appear to be lukewarm in deliberating effectively in the formal meetings of Panchayati Raj bodies and are hardly in a position to influence the decisions. However, educated women having urban background have played and still playing decisive role in P.R. affairs.

Some states approved direct elections and some other states prefer indirect elections to Panchayati Raj bodies. In such a situation we wanted to know the opinion of Government officials as to what mode of election they would prefer for their State? The officials categorically voted in favour of direct elections.

So far as the financial position of Panchayati Raj Institutions is concerned, they are really in a very bad shape and as such we wanted to know from the officials as to how to improve the financial position of the Panchayati Raj Institutions and the type of taxes they could levy? In reply to this query the officials stated that Panchayati Raj Institutions entirely depend on the funds given to them by the State Government and the amount being released by Central Government towards implementation of centrally sponsored programmes. They never try to augment their own resources. Officials were of the opinion that Panchayati Raj Institutions can create assets of their own by levying taxes like house tax, shop and health tax, sand, granite and other minor taxes - small scale industries taxes and by way of collecting land revenue.

On the basis of their long experience in Government services, we wanted to know from the officials as to whether they would like to add something more to the existing Panchayati Raj Act of Karnataka. In this connection, they said that provision should be made to encourage Panchayati Raj Institutions to develop their own resources to become self-sufficient and autonomous institutions. They further added that there should be little administrative and political interference right from the State down to the district level.

Coordination is such a problem which causes anxiety in every sphere of administrative system and the more we talk about better coordination the more the problem is aggravated. As such we wanted to know the officials view as to what mechanism for maintaining better coordination they would like to suggest? In reply to this query the officials suggested that each tier of Panchayati Raj Institutions should have its own style of functioning with little interference from above and government officials. A proper coordination mechanism be chalked out giving no scope for communication gap and it should be a two way traffic.

In regard to relationship between District Administration and Panchayati Raj Institutions the officials had to suggest that efforts should be made to ensure better co-ordination between District Administration and Panchayati Raj Institutions.

After knowing these facts we put a general query that different models of Panchayati Raj are obtained in our country, which model in their opinion was the best? The officials response was that the West Bengal model and their own model are supposed to be the best.

In regard to control mechanism relating to Panchayati Raj Institutions they had to suggest that there should be direct control by the District Administration (Zilla Parishad) over the Mandal. The District Administration apart from controlling power should act like a friend, philosopher and guide to the Mandals.

Coming to the problem of activating Gram Sabha and the powers and functions to be exercised by the Gram Sabha the officials replied that the main functions of the Gram Sabha was preparation and implementation of plans at the village level, identification of the beneficiaries, social audit etc. But with pain and anguish the officials pointed out that unfortunately the Gram Sabhas are used by the politicians as a political propaganda machinery. Pointing out the usefulness of Gram Sabha they suggested that if Gram Sabhas are really effective they can really help in avoiding the misuse in implementation of development schemes.

In regard to the size of the Gram Sabha the officials suggested that an effective strength of 400-500 people can be an ideal number. They further suggested that by fixing a common code of conduct, a definite venue of meeting of Gram Sabha and timely informations of the meetings of the Gram Sabha particularly on a free day may add to the effectiveness of the Gram Sabha. The Gram Sabha could also be attracted and can be made a happy meeting ground by arranging recreational, festive and other interest articulating activities. If all these steps are taken in right earnest, in the opinion of the officials, Gram Sabhas may be turned into an effective agency of participatory democracy.

Uttar Pradesh

We could not get the views of the officials as they did not fill up the schedule. However, during the course of our stay, through informal discussions with the officials, we could gather their views on some important issues.

In regard to the issue of conduct of elections to Panchayat Raj Institutions in Uttar Pradesh, the officials were of the view that timely elections should be ensured and the Panchayats should be allowed to complete their term as far as possible.

In regard to the role of Gram Sabha in ensuring peoples' participation in plan formulation and implementation, the officials were of the view that, of late, people's participation in Gram Sabha meetings has been on decline. They were of the view that unless Gram Sabhas are activated no meaningful purpose will be served by the panchayats. When asked about Gram Sabhas' role in implementation of development schemes, the officials said that at the Gram Panchayat level they are not very active.

In regard to the query about women's participation in the activities of the Panchayats the officials were of the view that so far women's participation has not shown encouraging results. The officials felt the low level of education and traditional social customs were some of the reasons as to why women's participation is not upto the mark. We probed further as to whether reservation of seats upto 30% would increase their participation? The officials were not optimistic about it.

In regard to the query on financial position of the Panchayats the officials were of the view that as the Panchayats have not been able to mobilise resources on their own, their financial position is not very good. The State Government has not been able to help them Financially. They also felt that corruption is on the increase in the panchayats and this needs to be stoped.

West Bengal

When the Research Team visited the State Capital of West Bengal (Calcutta) it arranged a meeting with the Secretariate level officials. In the meeting itself the Research Team explained the purpose of the visit of the research team and served on them a printed questionnaire with a request that it may kindly be filled up but only one official filled up the questionnaire. In such a situation the Research Team without looking into the questionnaire put up some queries already covered in the questionnaire and wanted to know the reaction of the officials. In this process our first query was as to who should be responsible for Panchayati Raj elections, the officials were of the view that the Panchayati Raj elections should be controlled and surprised by the State Government only and not by the independent constitutional body as Election Commission.

Then we turned the attention of the officials towards provision for Finance Commission as incorporated in the proposed Constitutional Amendment Bills. The officials were prompt to say that it was not necessary and they also felt that it will also not necessarily lead to the improvement of the financial conditions of the PRIs. In their opinion the existing disbursing of funds by the State Government to the PRIs used to serve the purpose.

Similarly the highly talked about criticised aspect of 64th Constitutional Amendment Bill is the provision of Audit of Panchayati Raj Institutions' accounts by the Comptroller and Auditor-General of India. As such we wanted to know the officials reactions. The officials were categorical of the view that it was not at all necessary to get the Panchayati Raj accounts audited by the CAG. They were of the opinion that the 'Gram Panchayat State Authority' should audit the Panchayat Raj accounts.

In regard to supersession of PRIs and the mechanism to solve this problem, the officials responded that in case of West Bengal it does not apply. They said that West Bengal PRI are rarely superseded. If at all they are superseded a new elected body is installed within a very short period.

Further we wanted to know whether they would like to have some changes in the existing Act of West Bengal. They said yes there should be statutory mandatory provisions that the elections to the superseded PRIs must be held maximum within a period of one year. To the point on what ground the PRIs should be superseded their reply was that the Panchayati Raj Act S.214 clearly states that in case of financial irregularities, flouting of work instructions and persistent failure to comply to the instructions, the Panchayati Raj Institutions may be superseded. Again in regard to the suspension of the members of PRI they said that S.213 of Panchayati Raj Act is clear enough and does not require any change.

In regard to representation of SC/ST, they had to suggest that on the basis of the population separate reserved constituencies should be carved out for SCs and STs. On the question of women's representation and reservation on Panchayati Raj body, their reply was that they should get reservation and separate constituencies may be created for them which may be rotated from one constituency to another.

In regard to the ideal tiers for Panchayati Raj Institutions, the officials said that three tier system is ideal one and the term of office of the elected representatives like West Bengal should be of five years. They were also of the opinion that a Separate cadre of Panchayati Raj bureaucracy be created which should be under the direct control and supervision of the State authority.

Since all the developmental activities have already been transferred to PRIs in West Bengal, the officials said that the district administration apart from its traditional functions of revenue administration and maintaining law and order, must play a coordinating role with the PRIs in developmental activities.

We further probed as to how better co-ordination could be ensured between PRIs and district administration. To this probe, their reply, was this, that in the case of PRIs the Act provides for a supervisory role for higher tiers. However, they were not satisfied by the functioning of the Nyaya Panchayats in the State. For that matter they suggested that village level courts may be set up under the judiciary.

We wanted to know whether the rules framed by the State Government from time to time in regard to PRIs proved to be an stumbling block in their efficient functioning? In reply to this query the officials said that West Bengal is free from such problems. If at all it was required, they were rarely framed and that too after the prior consent of the PRIs.

Response of Participants of Training Programme: 'Development Through Participation:

As already stated in the beginning that due to limited number of respondents from the different State headquarters, we tried to elicit the opinion of district level officials joining the above mentioned programmes in two batches between Sept. 22 to October 4, 1990, and between Feb. 4 to Feb. 14, 1991. Their reply to our pointed queries are presented below.

First of all we wanted to know their understanding about the proposed Constitutional Amendment Bills, i.e., 64th & 74th. The officials replied that the objectives of both the Amendment Bills are to give power to the people, take care of independent financial resources of P.R. Institutions and having proper auditing of the incomes and expenditure of P.R.Is. The 64th Amendment Bill provides for giving Constitutional status to PRIs whereas 74th Constitutional Amendment Bill aims at giving power to the people by way of more delegation of power.

They further stated that a doubt was created in the minds of the people and politicians that 64th Constitutional Amendment Bill may weaken the federal structure of the polity. On the other hand, the general impression about the 74th Amendment Bill was that it aimed at strengthening democracy at grass root level without affecting the federal structure of the polity. As such, according to them the basic difference between the two Bills is that 74th Amendment Bill believed in devolution of power to P.R.I whereas, 64th Amendment Bill in the name of P.R.Is aimed at encroaching upon the powers of States having tight control over P.R.Is by the Centre.

In regard to the present arrangement for holding P.R. elections, we wanted to know whether the present arrangement for conducting P.R. elections have achieved the objectives of timely, independent and fair elections. The officials reply was that so far electoral process was concerned it was alright, and they further added that due to politicization and growing awareness of the people as also increase in education may lead to free and fair elections in the due course of time. However, they added that the features of present electoral process are: use of money and muscle power and capturing of booths on the lines of Lok Sabha and Vidhan Sabha elections. As a result, the interests of the minorities and weaker sections of the society are not taken care of at all. Again they pointed out that instead of getting the counting of votes at the H.Q. of the block, it is being counted at the pooling booths itself which results into the coercion of and vengeance by the dominant sections after the election results are announced. As such they suggested that after the pooling is over the entire ballot boxes be collected at the block headquarters and counted at the block headquarter of the district itself without keeping booth-wise break up of results. They further suggested that when the dates for elections of P.R.Is are announced all P.R. bodies should be dissolved and for the time being the development works may be taken care of by the block level officers.

To a deeper query as to what would be their suggestion in regard to the status, composition and powers of the proposed Election Commission? The respondents pointed out that the basic duties of such a Commission should be to conduct free and fair elections, to ensure their periodicity, to get the vacant seats filled up through election within three months from the date vacancy exists, and to settle the disputes arising out of the electoral process.

In regard to the composition of the proposed Election Commission the respondents pointed out that such an Election Commission should be nominated body constituted within close cooperation of the Centre and concerned State. However, they were quick to add that there was no need to create an Election Commission. The existing Election Commission is competent and capable enough to conduct, monitor and evaluate the electoral process. It was further emphasized that it must be free from political interference and be headed by the person known for his efficiency and integrity. One of the respondent's suggested that the Central Election Commission of India has got its representative, i.e., Chief Election Officer in every State and he may conduct P.R. Elections the manner in which the Parliamentary and State Legislature Elections are conducted.

Coming to the question of Finance Commission we wanted to know as to what should be the status, composition and powers of proposed Finance Commission? The respondents suggested that the State Finance Commission should be responsible for the allocation of Fund to the R.R. Institutions. It should be independent of political influence and should enjoy the constitutional status. It should be consisted of eminent economists, persons having intimate knowledge and experience of P.R.Is, and some technocrats and social activists.

In regard to powers of the Commission they said that the Commission should be responsible for the distribution of net resources (proceeds) of taxes, duties, fees etc. between the State and P.R.Is as also the determination of taxes, duties, tolls etc. to be imposed by the P.R.Is on the local people. It should also take care of distribution of Grants-in-aid to the P.R.Is from consolidated fund of the State.

A question was put to the respondents that under what circumstances, the Panchayati Raj bodies should be superseded? In reply to this question the respondents said that P.R. bodies may be superseded if they become inactive and do something irregular. To further emphasis that if they flout the instructions of the higher tiers as laid down in the Act and behave in irresponsible manner they may be superseded. If P.R.I show inaction in the execution of development programme, misuse the government funds and indulge in corrupt practice, this may lead to their supersession.

Closely connected to this a further query was made as to which authority should suspend those elected representatives who are found to be negligent in duties and indulging in corrupt practices. The respondents said that from the Panchayat Samiti to Zilla Parishad the State Government should have the authority to suspend such elected representatives. At the Gram Panchayat level this power should rest with the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. However, only one respondent suggested that Zilla Parishad should constitute a vigilance Committee and this committee should have power to suspend the erring people's representative.

In regard to women's representation in the proposed amendment, the respondent's said that reservation of seats on Panchayati Raj bodies for women is a right step in right direction. However, they suggested that to educate women about the value of their participation in local decision-making all political parties should have their women's wing at the grass-roots level which may act as a motivating agent to ensure women's participation in local decision-making. Some of them suggested that the principle of 30% reservation should be strictly followed and apart from this women may also be encouraged to seek elections from general seats.

However, yet another respondent had to express different view. In his opinion reserving nearly one third of the seats for women may ultimately result into carving out reserved constituencies for women but, under the existing social scenario it may prove to be difficult to find suitable women candidates for such reserved constituencies. Such reservation may lead to denying some articulate public men to enter into electoral arena.

As regard the problem of coordination among the different tiers of P.R.Is the respondents were of the opinion that coordination may be maintained by way of developing awareness towards role and responsibilities among the people's representatives. Direct interaction and constant flow of information up-down and down-up may also help in maintaining coordination. Some of the respondents mentioned that the elected members of Zilla Parishad, M.L.As. of concerned area in confidence with B.D.O., S.D.M. and D.D.O/ D.M. may help in maintaining perfect coordination between the different tiers of P.R. Institutions. Organizing seminars, symposium and Annual Conference may also help in maintaining coordination.

There was a question as to how to make Gram Sabha viable and effective? In reply the respondents were of the view that ensuring regular meetings of Gram Sabha may prove quite useful. Representatives from each ward may be made responsible to ensure the participation of the members of Gram Sabha in the convened meetings. At the same time they had to suggest that voluntary organizations and government officials may play a vital role in motivating the members of Gram Sabha to participate in the meeting by way of educating them in regard to sharing the benefits of development programmes.

As regards the meetings of the Gram Sabha most of the respondents strongly felt that instead of two meetings in a year there should be four meetings of Gram Sabha in a year. Village school teacher may also provide a helping hand in ensuring the effectiveness of Gram Sabha. Some of the respondents were of the view that delegating more power and responsibilities may help in making Gram Sabha viable and effective.

In the preceding pages the view expressed by the Govt. officials of different states and the participants of the training programmes have been presented in explanatory form. The explanation is based on the opinion expressed by the respondents on our open-ended questions. As regards the opinion of respondents to the fixed answer question they are presented below in tabular form.

CHAPTER - V

FIELD NOTES AND OBSERVATIONS

Maintaining field diary and observing the reactions of the respondent are the important tools of empirical investigation. In the course of the field visit of select states we literally followed these methods. The information so collected are presented in the Chapter. We thought it proper to present it state-wise just to reflect as to what officials and peoples' representatives think about the proposed constitutional amendments in regard to Panchayati Raj and functioning of these institutions in their respective states.

Andhra Pradesh

During the rule of Telgu Desham Party the Panchayati Raj Acts of Andhra Pradesh were changed and on the lines of the recommendations of Ashok Mehta Committee the Government of Andhra Pradesh implemented the system through out the State. However, immediately after coming to power in 1989, the Congress Government appointed an expert Committee headed by B.P.R. Vittal to look into the maladies of the system operating and to suggest measures to strengthen them both structurally and functionally. Basically two problems are before the Committee for consideration i.e.; whether to retain the Mandal system or to replace it by Panchayat Samiti and secondly whether there should be direct or indirect elections for the higher tiers. After having discussion with the Chairman and the members of the Committee the Research Team observed that in their opinion the 64th Constitutional Amendment Bill was better. However, their impression appeared to be that the Panchayati Raj Institutions may be given constitutional status but working out of the details in regard to the functioning of Panchayati Raj Institutions be left to the discretion of State governments concern. To achieve the goals of development and social change the State government and the Panchayati Raj Institutions should work in mutual cooperation.

It was also observed that the officials did not relish the idea of having State Finance Commission and audit of Panchayati Raj accounts by the Comptroller and Auditor General of India. They also did not favour the idea of having a separate election machinery for holding Panchayati Raj elections.

Even the peoples' representatives and the Chairman of Zilla Praja Parishad, being the members of the opposition party, observed that the 64th Amendment Bill was more elaborate, exhaustive and highly acceptable. The peoples' representatives had full satisfaction in regard to the functioning of Panchayati Raj Institutions. However, as per their assessment lack of financial resources have put Panchayati Raj Institutions at the receiving end. It was observed that Panchayati Raj Institutions failed to augment their own financial resources out of fear of being unpopular among the masses. There was a suggestion in this regard, by people's representatives, that the Panchayati Raj Institutions may recommend certain taxes to be levied, but the collection work of such taxes may be done by the local level bureaucracy.

In the existing Act power of transferring school teachers was in the hands of Chairman Zilla Praja Parishad. However, it was observed that such power was being misused for political purposes and or for monetary gains. In this connection an observation was made that this power should rest with the Chairman Zilla Praja Parishad but some checks and balances should be searched out. Based upon our observation the following points emerged in regard to the Panchayati Raj Institutions in Andhra Pradesh:

- 1) At the present moment the development plans of a district is prepared by the District Planning Board. It was observed that the respondents felt that the planning for development should be prepared by the Gram Panchayat.
- 2) Powers of the Zilla Praja Parishad should be increased.
- 3) The size of the Mandal Praja Parishad should be curtailed and it should be in the radius of 20-25 Kms.
- 4) There should be three tier Panchayati Raj System in the State and a Mandal Praja Parishad should not exceed the population of 50 or 75 thousands.
- 5) An executive Officer should be appointed having authority to collect the revenues. He should also be held responsible for the recovery of loans.
- 6) There should be direct election from Gram Panchayat to Mandal Praja Parishad level. However, provisions should be there for indirect election of Zilla Praja Parishad.
- 7) A State Finance Commission should be set up with a provision of audit of accounts by the State agency.

- 8) 64th Constitutional Amendment Bill was better in comparison to 74th Constitutional Amendment Bill.
- 9) Panchayati Raj should be in the concurrent list of the Constitution. However, only broad outlines in regard to Panchayati Raj Institutions should find place in the Constitution.
- 10) The 64th Constitutional Amendment Bill should be given constitutional sanctions. But the term Governor should be replaced by State Legislature.

Bihar

After going through the amended Panchayati Raj Act of Bihar it may be observed that Bihar being the first state to incorporate the provisions of 64th Constitutional Amendment Bill in its Act. However, it is interesting to observe that the provisions of 64th Amendment Bill have been so incorporated that they do not infringe upon the autonomy of the state.

Though Panchayati Raj Act of Bihar is most exhaustive and gives too much power to Panchayati Raj Institutions yet we observed that Panchayati Raj Institutions in Bihar are really in very bad shape. It can be said that either they exist on paper or they have become a toy play in the hands of the local elites and state politicians.

The disappointing features of Panchayati Raj Institutions, observed by the Research Team may be summarised as follows:

- i) Panchayat Raj elections has been a very irregular phenomena. It was observed that elections to the Gram Panchayats and Panchayat Samities could not be held since 1978. It was equally disheartening to observe that Zilla Parishads have remained superseded since 1986. The irregular phenomena of holding elections and supersessions of Zilla Parishads might have prompted the Patna High Court to pass a judgement directing State Government to hold Panchayati Raj elections in right earnest. Perhaps, this might have been one of the reasons as to why Panchayati Raj Institution were not functioning properly in Bihar.

- ii) It was also observed that the financial position of Panchayati Raj Institutions in Bihar was in a very bad shape and most of these bodies were starving of funds. Due to the lack of funds no meaningful development activity was being taken up by the Panchayats. The misuse of JRY funds was apparently visible.
- iii) It was also observed that Panchayati Raj Institutions were not interested at all in mobilising their own resources. Even the collection of land revenue, which was under the preview of Gram Panchayats was not taken seriously. Unfortunately the State Government too did not make a serious bid to mobilise resources for Panchayati Raj Institutions.
- iv) It was also disappointing to observe that peoples' participation was totally lacking in the functioning of these institutions of grass-roots democracy. Gram Sabhas used to be a defunct body and used to meet on paper only.
- v) It was also observed that even the old Bihar Panchayati Raj Act provided for women's representation through cooption. But the actual participation of women in Panchayati Raj Institutions was far from satisfactory. Though the Amended Act of 1990 provides for 30% reservations of seats for women but, keeping in view the feudal mentality of Biharis, it can be every bodies' guess as to how these reserved seats could be filled up through elections.

Gujarat

Gujarat is one of the few states where Panchayati Raj experiment had been very successful. The success of these institutions may be attributed to the land itself which produced great personalities like Mahatma Gandhi and Sardar Ballabhbhai Patel. Apart from the successful functioning of Panchayati Raj Institutions, the role played by Panchayat Parishad a non-governmental agency has also been quite laudable.

It was observed during the field visit that the Panchayati Raj Institutions in Gujarat were completely different from other states. It was in the sense that the people and the government both have realised the strategic importance of Panchayati Raj Institutions in development. More over it was observed that the institutional norms were being observed and functionaries right from the village to District level were basically guided by Bania ethics.

It was also observed that both the people's representatives and government officials were not very much enthusiastic about proposed constitutional amendments in regard to Panchayati Raj Institutions. As per their perception when these institutions were functioning well what was the need for any change?

People were taking keen interest in the affairs of these institutions and these institutions were functioning in their own right without any interference from the outside.

In regard to women's participation in Panchayati Raj, it was observed that like other states, Gujarat too did not reflect any encouraging trend. In this regard the government officials and the people's representatives observed that non-participation of women may be attributed to traditional outlook and low percentage of literacy among rural women. However, a feeling among the officials was observed that reservation of seats for women should be part of Panchayati Raj Act of the state and in the gradual course with more and more socialization in the due course of time women may participate effectively in Panchayati Raj process.

It was also observed that the state did not favour the idea of having a Finance Commission and a separate Election Commission for Panchayati Raj Institutions. The idea of having direct elections for all the tiers on party basis was also not favoured by the state.

Direct control of the central government over Panchayati Raj Institutions was also not favoured.

However, giving constitutional status to Panchayati Raj with all powers vested with the state government was favoured.

An encouraging trend observed was that in the state right from the planning to the implementation, entire development works are looked after by the Gram Panchayats. However, it was also observed that planning bodies need to be strengthened.

A disappointing observation may be made that the D.D.O and the Chairman of Zilla Panchayats were, by and large, not having good relations and some times there was communication gap, as a result the development programmes did not get the proper push.

In regard to giving constitutional status to Panchayati Raj Institutions, it was observed that peoples' representatives felt that there should be written provisions as to what should be the relationship between the peoples' representatives and local level bureaucracy.

Haryana

Out of eight states selected for the study purpose, Haryana was the only state having two tier Panchayati Raj System i.e. Gram Panchayat and Panchayat Samiti. The Zilla Parishad was abolished in 1973. However, for the last two years the elections to Panchayat Samities have not taken place and as such in operational terms only Gram Panchayats were functioning in Haryana.

Some of the significant observations, the Research Team could make in course of field visit, are as follows:

- i) An over all view, of both officials and non-officials, was that Haryana should have three tier model of Panchayati Raj.
- ii) Peoples' participation in the affairs of Panchayati Raj Institutions showed a declining trend.
- iii) Traditional Panchayats exist in the Haryana village having considerable influence in comparison to formal Panchayats.
- iv) Irregular elections to Gram Panchayats and Panchayat Samities and abolition of Zilla Parishads have made these institutions very weak, as a result these institutions have come under the grip of local level bureaucracy.

- v) It was also observed that favoring 74th Constitutional Amendment Bill the Haryanavis felt that state autonomy over Panchayati Raj Institutions should not be compromised,
- vi) By and large, the idea of having a Finance Commission was favoured but the creation of separate Elections Commission was opposed.
- vii) Reservation of 30 percent seats for women on Panchayati Raj Institutions was not favoured. It was all due to lack of interest on the part of women to participate in the affairs of Panchayati Raj Institutions. As such a giant size image of Patriarchical society was clearly reflected in Haryana villages;
- viii) The idea of having formal participation of political parties in the affairs of Panchayati Raj Institution did not find favour;
- ix) Frequent amendments in Panchayati Raj Act was disliked by one and all ; and
- x) Transferring all development work to Panchayati Raj Institutions got very encouraging response.

Karnataka

Karnataka is a state, which has come in limelight in recent years for its experiment with Panchayati Raj Institutions and fortunately the experiment has widely been acclaimed. As such the Research Team was very much inquisitive to know about the experiment and its impact on the government servants and general masses. With this aim we decided to meet the government officials, and peoples' representatives separately to know about the ground realities. During the course of informal discussion with above mentioned two sets of functionaries what ever observations the Research Team could make are presented below. The first relates to peoples' representatives and the second one relates to government officials.

I

- i) It was observed that, by and large, the peoples' representatives felt that direct elections to Panchayati Raj Institutions have led to groupism and political rivalry in rural areas.

The direct election has also led to capturing of power by the dominant sections of the rural society in Panchayati Raj Institutions. It has also resulted into non representation of OBCs and SCs on Mandal Panchayats. According to some information out of 103 Mandal Panchayats not even a single member of the schedule caste is a Pradhan.

- ii) In regard to women's participation in the affairs of Panchayati Raj, it was encouraging to observe that women members played much more an effective role in comparision to their male counter parts.
- iii) It was observed that due to the non-cooperation of district police the social justice committees were facing a lot of problems and they were not functioning efficiently. In this regard a suggestion by the Research Team to have a cadre of Panchayati Raj police found encouraging favour.

- iv) By and large, an opinion emerged during the course of discussion that when ever there was any amendment in the Panchayati Raj Act the representatives of these institutions should be consulted.
- v) It was also observed that at the present moment the Pradhan was not accountable to any body for his acts of omissions and commissions. In the present frame of things the total accountability lies with the Mandal. As such there should be amendment in the Act making Pradhan accountable to Mandal Panchayat.
- vi) Since the Panchayati Raj Institutions have been constituted on party lines, it was observed that there was no harmonious relationship between the State Government and the Panchayati Raj Institution. The phenomena was observed due to the fact that the Panchayati Raj Institutions were dominated by Janta Dal and the rein of the state was in the hands of the Congress Party.
- vii) It was observed that peoples' representatives even though belonging to Janta Dal, favoured 64th Constitutional Amendment Bill.
- viii) An opinion was expressed by the peoples' representatives that in the Act itself the relationship between the peoples' representatives and district level bureaucracy should be defined.
- ix) A feeling among the peoples' representatives was observed that the functions to be transferred to the Panchayati Raj Institutions from the state list should find place in the constitution and a Zilla Parishad Finance Commission should be constituted. They also felt that 50 per cent of financial allocation to the state should be transferred to Zilla Parishads.

- x) It was also observed that taking away of public distribution system from Panchayati Raj Institutions by the state government was not liked by peoples' representatives. As per the perception of the peoples' representatives public distribution system failed in the state due to the interference of the State Government.

II

The perception of government officials in regard to Panchayati Raj Institutions as perceived by the Research Team are as follows:

- i) It was the observation of the Research Team that government officials had a feeling that Panchayati Raj Institutions have been given too much of power. As a result, they have gone beyond the control of the government.

The main areas of conflict between the representatives of Panchayati Raj and the district bureaucracy are: (a) transfers and postings (b) financial matters and (c) relationship between the chief secretary, Zilla Parishad and President Zilla Parishad. As per the officials' perception there was misuse of public funds by the Panchayati Raj representatives as most of the expenditures were incurred towards the T.A. and D. A. of these representatives.

- ii) It was also observed that, by and large, the district administration was in conflict with the Zilla Parishad.

However, even the government officials admitted that in some of the areas like hospitals, animal husbandry, sports etc., Panchayati Raj Institutions have played commandable role.

However, as things observed by the Research Team, the government officials wanted certain modifications which are given below:-

- a) The size of the Mandal Panchayat should be small and as such, the present size be reduced.
- b) There should be a clear cut demarcation in regard to the powers and functions of Chief Secretary Zilla Parishad and the President of Zilla Parishad.
- c) The provisions for two-third majority required for vote of no confidence in the existing Panchayati Raj Act be replaced by the word 'a simple majority'.
- d) Curtailment of powers of the President Zilla Parishad in regard to transfers and postings.
- e) The commissioner of the division concerned should have the power to suspend any resolution adopted by the Zilla Parishad.
- f) A ceiling on the TA/DA of the Panchayati Raj representatives be fixed.
- g) There should be a demarcation line in regard to the powers and functions of the local level bureaucracy and peoples' representatives and their relationship should be defined.
- h) In regard to expenditures the bureaucracy should have the final say.

- i) Lop - sided development of a particular area on political consideration should be minimized.

Madhya Pradesh

Based on the field visit of Madhya Pradesh and conversation with the government officials and the peoples' representatives, the Research Team attempted to analyse the statements of both the groups mentioned above and attempted to make its own observation which are given below:-

- i) Frequent change in Panchayati Raj Acts have been an usual phenomena in almost every state. Recently the Madhya Pradesh government has made sweeping changes in its Panchayati Raj Act which contains following provisions:-
  - a) Three tier system i.e., Gram Panchayat at village level, the Janpada Panchayat at Block level and Zilla Parishad at District level.
  - b) Provision for the Gram Sabha at the level of Patwari circle.
  - c) Gram Sabha under the Amended Act gets a new dimension.
  - d) Each Gram Panchayat be divided in not less than ten wards and each ward shall have one representative. On an average each Gram Panchayat will have twelve wards.
  - e) On an average a Gram Panchayat on the basis of population, will have three villages. If the population goes beyond 5000 there shall be a Nagar Panchayat.

- f) There is no provision for Nyaya Panchayat in the Amended Act.
- g) Provision for the reservation of seats for schedule caste and schedule tribes at all the three tiers.
- h) Provision for reservation of seats for women at all the levels by the draw of lots.
- i) Provision for elections within six months in case of supersessions of the Panchayati Raj body.
- j) Provision for levying taxes both by the State Government and Panchayati Raj Institutions. After the collection of the taxes, transfer of such revenues to the Panchayati Raj fund.
- k) Provisions for an I.A.S. Officer as an Chief Executive Officer at the Zilla Parishad level and BDO as the Chief Executive at the Janpada level.
- l) Provision for transfer of subjects by the state government to the Panchayati Raj Institutions.

However, on all these provisions a comment was made by the government officials that successful working of Panchayati Raj Institutions will, by and large, depend on the political will of the political leadership.

In the Amended Act, provisions for no confidence has been made quite difficult.

Panchayati Raj Institutions have been given three major roles to play i.e., regulatory, social-welfare and development.

Departments like agriculture, animal husbandry, fisheries, social welfare and cooperation would be under the exclusive control of the Panchayati Raj Institutions. Within the state list there are certain concurrent provisions like irrigation, PWD, etc. which will be looked after both by state government and Panchayati Raj Institutions.

In regard to proposed Constitutional Amendment Bills certain observations which were made are as follows:-

- 1) Reservation of one-third of seats for women on Panchayati Raj Institutions was not favoured.
- 2) Detailed provision of Panchayati Raj in the constitution was also not favoured.
- 3) 64th Constitutional Amendment Bill may be treated as an attack on the federal nature of the polity.
- 4) Elections to Panchayati Raj Institutions on party line got favorable response.
- 5) Relationship between the district level bureaucracy and Panchayati Raj Representatives left a question mark.
- 6) Powers and jurisdiction of Panchayats should be clearly identified and specified in the Act.

Uttar Pradesh

Uttar Pradesh is one of the few states which introduced Panchayati Raj Institutions in the initial stages. Uttar Pradesh Act provides for three tier structure of Panchayati Raj Institutions having direct elections at Gram Panchayat level and indirect elections at Kshetra Panchayat Samiti and the Zilla Parishad level. The term of these bodies are of five years.

In regard to giving Panchayati Raj Institutions the Constitutional status, it was observed that, by and large, people favoured it. However, the autonomy of state government may not be affected by giving them the constitutional status was the feeling of both government officials and peoples' representatives.

The idea of having a separate Election Commission for Panchayati Raj Institution was opposed and strengthening of institution of Nyaya Panchayat was favoured.

Entering political parties into election arena in their formal capacity at the level of grass-root institutions was opposed and elections without interference of political parties was favoured.

Lack of financial resources putting Panchayati Raj Institutions in a hopeless position was reflected in the comments of the peoples' representatives.

Audit of Panchayati Raj accounts by the Comptroller and Auditor General of India did not find favour. It was observed that, by and large, people were of the opinion that existing auditing state apparatus was perfectly alright.

It was disheartening to observe that Gram Sabhas were defunct and did not attract popular participation in decision-making. They also did not play any role in planning process. Rule making by the state government without consulting peoples' representatives affected the functioning of Panchayati Raj Institutions adversely.

Provision for 30% reservation of seats for women on Panchayati Raj Institutions was not liked by overwhelming majority of the peoples' representatives and government officials both. As per their perception due to the lack of education among women their effective participation could not be ensured. However, it should be a gradual process and adequate seats may be reserved for women in future keeping in view the rising consciousness among them.

It was also observed that people were of the view that state government deliberately did not want to see Panchayati Raj Institutions functioning well. The Panchayati Raj Institutions were frequently superseded on flimsy grounds.

West Bengal

West Bengal is a state where Panchayati Raj Institutions are working most successfully in comparison to other states. It may be attributed to strong party based cadre of functionaries who have played significant role in mobilising the rural population.

In regard to changes likely to be brought about through Constitutional Amendment, it was observed that, by and large, officials and peoples' representatives were of the view that such changes are not required at all as Panchayati Raj Institutions were functioning well in West Bengal. It was also observed that the people of West-Bengal had a strong feeling that Panchayati Raj Institutions in their present form could function well provided the State Governments had the will to see their success.

However, it was observed that idea of giving constitutional status to Panchayati Raj Institutions found favour from other sections who did not belong to Marxist ideology. But even those who favoured this idea were quick to point out that it should not be done at the cost of state autonomy.

The proposition of getting Panchayati Raj elections conducted through Central Election Commission did not find favour. Nor the idea of getting the Panchayati Raj accounts audited by the Comptroller and Auditor General of India was favoured.

Having direct elections of Pradhan and Chairman Zilla Parishad was opposed on the ground that it may create tension in the society.

Three tier system of Panchayati Raj Institutions was widely approved as the system was functioning very effectively.

Reservation of seats for SC/ST and women was favoured both by peoples' representatives and government officials.

Involvement of Gram Panchayats in development programmes was advocated and a suggestion was made that entire development plans and their implementation should be left at the disposal of Gram Panchayats.

None functional character of Nyaya Panchayats was an accepted fact.

On the basis of our observations of different states in regard to Panchayati Raj Institutions, in the following pages an attempt has been made to give the composite picture of all the states combined together.

(1) Constitutional Status to PRIs

This has been one of the most controversial issues whether constitutional status to PRIs should be conferred or not. It was found that most of the states did not favour constitutional status to PRI as it was an encroachment on the autonomy of the state. However, they accepted reluctantly that only some broad features should be defined in the Constitution and powers for working out the details should be left to the State Governments. Except for West-Bengal other states did not have objection to such an idea. West Bengal did not favour any change in its Act.

(2) Structure

All the states favoured the three-tier Panchayati Raj structure. But also felt that it should be left to the states to work out which model could be suitable to their states. However, in principle all the states accepted the three tier structure as best suited to the whole of the country.

(3) Duration of Term of PRIs

A term of five years was acceptable to all states.

(4) Elections

Holding of elections to Panchayati Raj Institutions has been very irregular in the state of Bihar, Uttar Pradesh and Haryana. Most of the State Governments did not favour a direct election at the village level on party lines except the state of Madhya Pradesh and West Bengal. There was a favourable response for a direct election at the other two levels i.e. Taluk/ Block and District Levels. However, a direct election at the Zilla Parishad level for the post of chairman may raise certain problems. Most of the states referred indirect election.

(5) Reservations

One of the provisions of 64th Amendment Bill reserving 30% seats in favour of women has come under attack in all the states. Even states like West Bengal and Gujarat were not prepared to reserve 30% seats in favour of women. However, at present only Karnataka has reserved 25% seats for women. In most of the states the favorable opinion was that at present only 10% of the seats should be reserved for women and gradually as the consciousness, among women grows, it should be increased. But in any case it should not cross 25%. In Karnataka they felt that the present system was adequate and did not feel any need to alter the same.

There was general agreement that rotation of reserved seats or constituencies should be introduced, as reservations of seats had created vested interests.

In regard to reservation for SC/ST, it was felt that adequate provisions existed in the Acts to ensure and encourage their participation.

(6) Election Commission

Most of the states were against having Central Election Commission to hold Panchayati Raj elections. Only West Bengal had no objection in case it was decided as such. Other states agreed that the existing state machinery was adequate enough to hold free and fair elections. States like Gujarat and West Bengal reflected that holding elections regularly was enough to prove the soundness of the existing election machinery in their state.

(7) Finance Commission

It was felt that a Finance Commission under central supervision may increase centralisation of authority and weakening of the state power. As such no state was in favour of a Finance Commission under the Central Government. The general opinion was that control over the money to Panchayats should be vested in the State Government. However, every state preferred to have a Panchayati Raj Finance Commission at the state level.

(8) Audit by CAG

This is another provision under the proposed Bill with which no State Government agreed. It was felt that since there was already a provision under the existing State Act to audit the accounts, there was no need for any central authority to audit the Panchayati Raj accounts. It would amount to encroaching over the State autonomy.

(9) Bureaucracy Vs Elected Representatives

The Research Team was constrained to find that in all most all the states, ofcourse to a lesser extent in the states of Karnataka, Andhra Pradesh and Gujarat, the Panchayati Raj Institutions were under the control of the Bureaucracy. In States like Karnataka the bureaucracy felt that too much of power had been given to the Panchayat Raj Institutions and it has been misused.

There has been a love hate relationship between the elected representatives and the burcaucracy. The tension and the conflict was visible in states like Karnataka and Gujarat. There has been an ego tussle between them and each tried to interpret the Act according to its power and status.

Most of the bureaucrats, the Team met, accepted in all frankness that this tussle has been going on for the last few years, and that in some cases it has affected the working of the Panchayati Raj Institutions itself. Most of the bureaucrats particularly at the lower and the middle level felt that the powers of the elected representatives should be curtailed. They did not cherish the idea of working under the Panchayati Raj representatives.

The Team noted that it was simply a tussle for power and control of the Panchayati Raj Institutions between the officials and non-officials.

(10) Suspension and supercession

This power has been grossly misused in states like Bihar, Haryana and Uttar Pradesh and rarely used in states like Gujarat and West Bengal, where these institutions have taken a firm root. Most of the states were of the opinion that the power to suspend or supersede should be vested with the State Government. Most of the states felt that a period of six months for by election to a superseded Panchayat was not practicable, it should be a minimum of one year, so that necessary arrangements could be made to hold the elections.

(11) Comparison between 64th & 74th Constitutional Amendment Bills

To some states the provisions of the 74th Amendment Bill were more acceptable as they felt that the 74th Amendment had conferred greater flexibility in dealing with the relationship between the Centre and State on the one hand and between State and the Panchayati Raj Institutions on the other. They felt that the 64th Amendment Bill bye-passes the states in matters relating to Panchayati Raj Institutions. However, there were some states, including Karnataka which preferred 64th Amendment Bill with a suggestion that the word Governor be replaced by the word State Government in the Bill.

CHAPTER - VI

RECOMMENDATIONS

Based on the thorough review of latest Panchayati Raj Acts of the select states and proposed Constitutional Amendment Bills in regard to Panchayati Raj Institutions as also our personal observations and conversation with government officials and peoples' representatives, in the present chapter an attempt has been made to recommend certain measures which may be considered by the Government of India, while chalking out the future strategy for revitalising Panchayati Raj Institutions.

The recommendations have been put in three parts. Part-I relates to the changes required to be made in individual select states. Part II presents a composite view which may be applicable in case of all the States and Union Territories of the Republic of India. Similarly Part III relates to a new approach to Panchayati Raj Institutions proposed by the Research Team for the consideration of Government of India.

PART - I

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR INDIVIDUAL STATES

Andhra Pradesh

1. For the conduct of regular elections to the Panchayati Raj bodies an Election Commission should be constituted.
2. The role and importance of the Gram Sabha should be emphasised and one of the major powers that could be given to them is that of identification of the beneficiaries of various development programmes.

3. For proper distribution of finances and adequate devolution of financial resources, a Finance Commission should be set up at the state level.
4. It has been felt that the existing Mandals were very large in size and they are not really effective in taking the administration closer to the people. Hence the size of the Mandal should be reduced.
5. In case of reconstitution of Panchayati Raj Institutions the term extendable by three years needs to be amended and the maximum limit should not exceed beyond six months.

Bihar

1. The Panchayati Raj Act of Bihar is one of the most comprehensive Acts having certain well meaning features. Bihar has been the first state to amend its Act and to incorporate the basic provisions of the Sixty Fourth Amendment Bill. However, inspite of these facts Panchayati Raj Institutions in Bihar have been very weak both institutionally and financially.
2. Elections to Panchayati Raj Institutions have been very irregular. This may be one of the reasons of its being existing only on papers. The elections to Gram Panchayats and Panchayat Samities could not be held since 1978 and Zilla Parishads are superseded since 1982. Recently when the Patna High Court directed the State Government to hold elections, the Government issued an ordinance to nullify the orders of the High Court.

Nullification of judicial order by the Executive or Executive Legislation is in no way manifestation of the working of a healthy democracy. Mutual respect and co-operative spirit in the major Constitutional instrumentalities are essential for Constitutional democracy to operate effectively and efficiently.

3. Financially these institutions are in a very bad shape as they have no resources of their own and State Government too have not taken any step to improve their financial position.
4. As the Panchayati Raj Institutions have been either superseded or elections could not be held for a long time, people in general have lost faith in these institutions. One of the mechanism through which people's faith in these institutions could be restored was to strictly and honestly follow the provisions of the Act in its letter and spirit.
5. What was needed in Bihar was not changes or amendments in the Act but the political will to implement the provisions of the Acts. Elimination of vested interests at the grass-roots should be the next step.

Haryana

1. The nomenclature of both the Village Panchayat and the Panchayat Samiti and Zilla Parishad Acts should be changed and Haryana should have its own Panchayati Raj Act.
2. At the present moment Haryana has two-tier Panchayati Raj structure. The Zilla Parishad was abolished in 1976. For a better coordination and greater representation of the people's representatives the Zilla Parishad should be revived. This may also help in plan formulation and its implementation.

3. As there is no Zilla Parishad the government and the bureaucracy have acquired most of the powers and functions that were the spheres of the Zilla Parishads. This has to be checked, and certain powers should be transferred to Panchayat Samities and Village Panchayats.
4. There is no specified audit of accounts mechanism in the Gram Panchayat Act. The Act should be amended and necessary changes should be incorporated.
5. The Act does not provide for the constitution of the Gram Sabha which has a vital role to play. Gram Sabha should be recognised as the basic unit at the village level. Its powers and functions should be clearly defined.
6. To conduct and supervise elections, it would be advisable to constitute an Election Commission and for better distribution and mobilisation of finances a Finance Commission should be set up. This should be brought under the Act by necessary amendment.
7. The Haryana Government may exercise its mind and in consultation with the peoples' representatives may prepare a comprehensive Act for all the three tiers i.e. Gram Panchayat, Panchayat Samiti and Zilla Parishad.

Gujarat

1. The revenue collection task should be assigned to Gram Panchayats and Provision should be made for Panchayati Raj Institutions to augment their own resources.
2. Though in Gujarat the Zilla Parishad is actively associated with district plan formulation, the Gram Panchayats play insignificant role in plan formulation. Provision should be made in the Act to get active participation of Gram Panchayats in plan formulation.

3. It has been observed that in absence of a clear cut provision in regard to the relationship between the District Development Officer and Chairman, Zilla Panchayat, both have been at daggersdrawn. There should be a clear demarcation of powers and functions of these two functionaries in the Act.

Karnataka

1. Though the Mandal Panchayats have been assigned enormous functions, their command over resources is very limited. More resources both financial and material should be provided to the Mandal Panchayats.
2. In absence of sufficient funds the Mandal Panchayats have not done constructive work in villages to attract the attention of general masses. It has left its impact on the meetings of Gram Sabha. In absence of development works taken up at the village level the Gram Sabhas are also helpless in chalking out development plans for the village. Provision in the Act should be made for special funds for Gram Panchayats.
3. Suitable changes should be made in the Act to define and describe in clear cut terms the powers and functions of the Chief Secretary and the Chairman, Zilla Parishad. In case of transfers and postings of teachers and employees of Panchayati Raj some clear cut provisions should be made in the Act.

4. Some of the functions presently performed by the Zilla Parishads may be transferred to Mandal Panchayats along with transfer of resources.
5. The role and importance of the MLAs at the Taluk Level should be decreased. Even at the Zilla Parishads meetings MPs, MLAs, MLAs should not be allowed to influence the decisions adversely.
6. The Act has an elaborate and exhaustive chapter dealing with Nyaya Panchayats. It is high time that this provision of the Act should also be implemented without waiting for five years to dispense cheap and speedy justice at the grass root level.
7. To conduct and supervise Panchayati Raj elections, the Act should be amended so as to constitute an Election Commission.

Madhya Pradesh

1. The Act provides for direct elections at all the three levels on party basis. But this should be discontinued at the level of village Panchayat
2. The newly amended Act has no provision for a Finance Commission. As such for proper regulation of funds some financial institution should be created. It may be suggested that on the lines of Constitutional Amendment Bills, a Finance Commission may be set up.
3. For the conduct of elections the Act should provide for the setting up of an Election Commission. The present Act is the brain child of the B.J.P. Government and yet to be implemented. The impact and success of the provisions could be assessed only when they are put to the test.

Uttar Pradesh

1. In Uttar Pradesh the Panchayats are financially very weak. In order to ensure regular flow of funds and their proper distribution a Finance Commission should be constituted.
2. In order to supervise and conduct elections, a separate Election Commission for Panchayati Raj should be constituted.
3. Provisions should be made in the Act for Certain percentage of seats reserved for women.
4. To make Gram Panchayats effective in Uttar Pradesh for 4000 population there should be a Gram Panchayat. 5. The Gram Sabha should be activated and people should be encouraged to take part in its meetings. Date of regular meetings of Gram Sabha should be notified well in advance.
6. Nyaya Panchayats are dormant, they should be activated.
7. Rule making power of the government should be democratised by way of involvement of the various interest groups.
8. At the present moment there is no involvement of Gram Panchayats in planning process. In the Act suitable amendment should be made to involve Gram Panchayats in planning process.
9. The powers and functions of the Zilla Parishad and the Kshettra Samiti should be curtailed and some of those powers should be transferred to the Village Panchayats along with funds.
10. Financially too the Village Panchayats are very weak and are not able to perform even minimum functions required by them. Measures should be taken for resource mobilisation for Gram Panchayats.

West Bengal

1. Even though elections in West Bengal have been held regularly yet for better coordination and efficiency a separate Election Commission should be constituted for holding P.R.Is elections.
2. The Gram Panchayats lack in financial resources. Attempts should be made to mobilise resources for Gram Panchayats to enable them to take up development works.
3. Nyaya Panchayats should be activated and peoples' faith in these institutions should be restored by way of suitable amendment in the Act.
4. Certain percentage of seats should be reserved for women candidates in the Act.
5. Reservation to SC/ST needs a change and should be based on rotation of constituencies.
6. In matters pertaining to rule making the views of the panchayati Raj Institutions should be taken into account.
7. Certain changes are required in the planning process so that the Gram Panchayats can become more powerful.
8. The provision of section 207 of the Act dealing with transfer of Institutions, schemes alongwith funds and manpower to the Panchayats should be enforced without further delay.

Finally, it may be suggested that for proper and effective functioning of Panchayati Raj no doubt good legislative provisions - well thought of, free from ambiguity and with post legislative audit scheme, are not only desirable but a sine qua non. But what is needed most is the political commitment and conviction, administrative sensitivity and sense of service, judicial activism and creativity and over and above all, peoples' involvement both mental and physical are some of the prerequisites for the successful working of Panchayati Raj Institutions.

PART - II

GENERAL RECOMMENDATIONS

1. Constitutional Status to PRI

Based on our findings of the study, we feel that Constitutional status should be conferred to PRIs as this may provide an uniform model for the whole of the country. a uniform structure with clearcut provision for powers and functions and other details may strengthen Panchayati Raj Institutions. However, finalising the modalities of their working may be left to the respective State Governments.

2. Gram Sabha

For the success of Panchayati Raj Institutions peoples' faith and participation in these institutions must be ensured. We suggest that to ensure peoples' participation, the Gram Sabha should be institutionalised and given more powers both in respect of planning and implementation. The Gram Sabha must be recognised as the basic unit at the village level and for this purpose certain guide lines should be evolved for Gram Panchayat to ensure the success of Gram Sabha. For example, method of reward and punishment to the members of Gram Panchayats be introduced. A Gram Panchayat having succeeded in ensuring regular and successful meetings of Gram Sabha may be rewarded by Panchayat Samiti/Mandal Panchayat. Similarly the Gram Panchayats which fail in doing so may be superseded and a new Gram Panchayat may be constituted within six months. At least four meetings of Gram Sabha in a year must be ensured.

3. Structure

For efficient and effective functioning of Panchayati Raj Institutions, we recommend a three tier structure. However, some flexibility may be provided and the states may be given some latitude to consider the tier system as per the suitability of the State.

The Gram Panchayat should be the hub of all development activities with a supervisory and monitoring role to Panchayat Samiti/Mandal Panchayat. The Zilla Parishad may play a guiding role and basically be a planning and fund raising organisation for village development plan.

4. Election Commission

One of the major drawbacks of PRI, is that election to these bodies, in most of the states, has been very irregular. To ensure regular elections, we suggest that the elections to these bodies should be conducted and supervised by the Election Commission specially constituted for Panchayati Raj Institutions. If such mandatory provisions are made, on their violation, even the court can interfere in the matter as has recently been done by the Patna High Court. It was possible for the court only because such mandatory provisions exist in the amended Act of Bihar. We strongly feel that unless and until elections become a regular feature the Panchayati Raj Institutions will not take firm roots.

5. Reservation of Seats for Women

All the States' Panchayati Raj Acts provide for reservations of seats for women, of course, the percentage varies. Only Karnataka Act provides for 25% reservation of seats for women. We feel that any reservation to the tune of 25%, 30% or even 1/3 of the total seats may not attract and ensure women's participation. In order to check the growth of vested interests, reservations should be done in phased manner and sincere efforts should be made to educate the women about the need for their active participation in the activities of Panchayati Raj Institutions. We recommend 15% reservation of seats in the first stage and subsequently to 20% and further to a maximum of 30% after a period of 10 years. In the meanwhile study or survey should be conducted to assess the extent and degree of participation of women in PRIs. Depending upon the results of the survey, so conducted, reservations of seats can be abolished or retained or enhanced for future.

6. Finance Commission

It is a known fact that in most of the States Panchayati Raj Institutions have been starving of funds. Without adequate financial guarantee and support no meaningful development schemes can be initiated by these institutions. One of the usual complaints is that the state governments do not give adequate funds to the Panchayati Raj Institutions. We suggest that each State Government should constitute a Finance Commission for Panchayati Raj which should guarantee the allocation of resources (finances) to these institutions. It is also recommended that from the state budget fifty percent of the funds allocated for development activities be transferred to the Panchayati Raj Institutions.

7. Rule Making Process

We observed that in all the states, except Gujarat, the Panchayati Raj representatives do not play any role in rule making inspite of the fact that they are directly affected by these rules. We feel that any rule so framed should be done in consultation with the Panchayati Raj representatives of the respective states. Alternatively, on the patterns of Gujarat Panchayat Parishad every State should have such type of a voluntary organisation which may take care of rule making in consultation with the respective State governments.

8. Mode of Elections

Of late, there had been a lot of controversy in regard to the mode of elections to the office bearers of Panchayati Raj Institutions. We recommend direct elections at the village and intermediate level and indirect election at the Zilla Parishad level. Any direct election at the Zilla Parishad level may not be politically suitable. On the question of involvement of political parties in Panchayat Raj elections, we feel that this will further divide the rural society. The political parties should not be allowed to participate in Panchayati Raj elections. This may ensure the growth of a homogeneous rural society based on mutual cooperation and effective participation of the villagers.

9. Development Schemes

All development schemes along with funds and manpower should be transferred to the Panchayati Raj Institutions by the State government on the patterns of West Bengal, Gujarat, Karnataka and Madhya Pradesh.

10. Nyaya Panchayats

Perhaps under the existing Acts of all the states the institution of administration of justice i.e. Nyaya Panchayats have suffered the most. In all the eight states covered under the study the institution of Nyaya Panchayat is only a legislative and decorative institution. This institution can play a very useful role if developed in true sense. Petty cases and especially cases relating to atrocities on weaker sections of the society may be entrusted to Nyaya Panchayats. We suggest that measures should be initiated to revive these centres of administration of justice at the village level. In a small way it will help settle petty disputes and will increase the cooperative spirit among the people and finally faith in the justice delivery system.

11. Relationship between Bureaucracy and Panchayati Raj Representatives

In states like Karnataka, Gujarat, and Andhra Pradesh the Panchayati Raj Institutions have taken roots to some extent. However, a visible distrust existed between the bureaucracy and Panchayati Raj representatives. We suggest that functions and powers of both should be defined clearly in the Act. Efforts should also be made to ensure coordination between them and a sense of superiority or inferiority should not be allowed to develop. An workable and amicable relationship should be ensured. Both should be made to realise that they have to work for the people's welfare and they are duty bound to serve the cause of people.

12 Audit of Panchayat Raj Accounts

All the state Acts have adequate provisions for the Audit of Panchayati Raj accounts, we suggest that the existing mechanism should be retained. Any central intervention may only complicate the problem and lead to delay in the audit of accounts. It may be misunderstood as an interference by the centre in the affairs of the state.

13. Suspension of Members/Supersession of PRIs

We strongly feel that for suspending any elected member of Panchayati Raj Institutions the grounds stipulated under the respective Acts must be taken into account. Before initiating the action of suspension the principles of fairness should be followed. The final order of suspension should be supported by elaborate reasons. This is essential to avoid arbitrariness.

In regard to supersession of Panchayati Raj bodies we suggest that in the case of Village Panchayat and the Intermediate Panchayat the power to supersede should vest with the Zilla Parishad and in case of Zilla Parishad the State Government may exercise this power. However due procedure should be adopted before action being taken.

14 Reconstitution of Superseded PRIs

We recommend that in the case of superseded/dissolved bodies, election to reconstitute such bodies be held within a period of six months. Under no circumstances this period should be extended. The term of such reconstituted Panchayati Raj Institutions should be for the same period as the institution would have in normal course.

15 Panchayati Raj Bureaucracy

We are of the view that in order to strengthen the working of Panchayati Raj Institutions adequate man power is needed. For staff to be employed, the PRIs at the present moment depend on the state governments. To enable them to function efficiently a separate cadre of Panchayati Raj Bureaucracy, particularly for class III and IV employees, should be created, who may directly be appointed and controlled by the Panchayati Raj Institutions.

16. Salaries to PRIs Representatives

The Panchayati Raj Acts of Karnataka and Andhra Pradesh provide for salaries to be paid to the Panchayati Raj representatives, based on these provisions, other states should make suitable amendments in their Acts to incorporate these provisions.

PART -III

EXPERIMENTAL MODEL

The above mentioned recommendations have been made in the context of existing three tier/two-tier model of Panchayati Raj Institutions. In succeeding pages attempt is being made to suggest entirely a different model i.e. One-Tier model for the consideration of the government as to whether it will prove to be workable.

For the proposed model, inspiration has been drawn from part IV of the constitution i.e. 'Directive Principles of State Policy. The constitutional directive under Article 40 of the constitution states that "the State shall take steps to organise Village Panchayats and endow them with such powers and authority as may be necessary to enable them to function as units of self-government".

Here it may be pointed out that the founding fathers of the Constitution were more concerned about the homogeneous character of our rural society and to change the face of rural India through community efforts based on mutual trust and cooperation. The creation of Village Panchayats might have got its inspiration from the Sriniketan experiment (1921) of Sri Ravindra Nath Tagore and what Mahatma Gandhi propagated during freedom movement and Dandi march.

We are proposing the one Tier-Model particularly restricting ourselves to the provisions of Article 40 of the Constitution which provides only for the creation of 'Village Panchayats'. The Institutional framework proposed for one tier system i.e., Gram Panchayat may be as follows:

- (i) The Gram Sabha should be the general body of the Gram Panchayat, consisting of all the adults residing within its area.
- (ii) It should have minimum two meetings in a year. In the annual meeting it should pass the Gram Panchayat budget and review its accounts of the last year at its half yearly meeting. It may have two more ordinary meetings in a year.

- (iii) It should prepare the development plan of the village in its annual meeting and monitor the implementation of development programmes in half yearly and quarterly meetings.
- (iv) One fourth of the total adult members should constitute the quorum for the meeting of the Gram Sabha.
- (v) For general villages a population of 2500 and for Scheduled Tribe Villages a population of 1500 may be required to constitute a Gram Panchayat.
- (vi) Gram Sabha may be treated as the legislative wing of the Gram Panchayat.
- (vii) It should have power to levy taxes to augment the resources of Gram Panchayat.
- (viii) There should be Gram Panchayat Executive Committee of not less than 10 members.
- (ix) These members should be directly elected by adult members of the Village for which every Gram Panchayat should be divided into 5 wards and each ward may elect two members as its representatives on the village executive.
- (x) All the ten members may elect a Sarpancha/Mukhiya from amongst them.
- (xi) The term of the executive committee should be of five years.
- (xii) Executive Committee should act basically as implementing agency of the decisions taken by the Gram Sabha. It should also implement all the development programmes for the village on behalf of Gram Sabha.

- (xiii) The executive should meet at least once a month and should be expected to give direction to the collective efforts and to operate as an agency of Gram Panchayat.
- (xiv) Mukhiya/Sarpancha may be treated as first among the equals and may be removed by the majority of two third members of the village executive on the basis of charges established against him.
- (xv) Village executive may have different sub-committees headed by a member of the executive committee to look after a particular function.
- (xvi) There should be a judicial wing of Gram Panchayat which may be called Gram Katchery or village judiciary. It should be an integral part of Gram Panchayat. It is suffice to call it village court.
- (xvii) It should consist of ten elected Panchas two from each ward for a term of five years.
- (xviii) A chairperson may be appointed, who may probably be a retired judicial magistrate and may be paid some salary.
- (xix) The village court may look into some minor cases like burglary, Cattle theft, crop theft, encroachment and mutation cases.
- (xx) There may be provision for appeal in the sub-divisional Court against the judgement of village Court.
- (xxi) There should be a Gram Raksha Dal or village volunteer Force. All the willing adult villagers may join this force and it may be headed by a Dalpati (chief officer). The Dalpati may be paid some salary.

- (xxii) The basic duty of village voluntary force should be to take care of safety of life and property of villagers. And it should be given some police power.
- (xxiii) All the development functions may be transferred to village panchayat.
- (xxiv) To activate Gram Sabha, cooperative societies or groups of small farmers, artisans, and different interest groups may be constituted in following manner to mobilize the rural masses.

(a) Benefit Generating Development Activities

Mobilisation has to be around economic and social activities, participation in which gives the poor a hope of gaining more material benefits for themselves. Therefore, group should be formed around productive activities.

(b) Homogeneity of Group

The groups should be formed in such a way that they must be homogeneous in socio-economic terms. It is because the same economic and social strata have common concern and should discuss it freely from a common platform. Even if the groups are functionally organised, such as artisans groups or poultry farmer's groups, the criterion of homogeneity in group membership would apply; otherwise such groups are likely to be dominated by a few rich and powerful members.

(c) Membership and Size

In the formation of these groups there should not be any pressure from outside. They should be left free to choose their own groups. And thus only those who could work together, may join together to form small groups. This may bring about greater cohesiveness and durability of groups. The membership in that group would be in the range of 15 to 30. Bigger groups should be discouraged as these may not prove conducive to the groups cohesiveness.

(d) Multifunctional Character

Groups should not be unifunctional rather they should be multi-functional in scope. In other words, the members of the groups should be involved in more than one productive activity. Small farmers, tenants and landless agricultural labourers are normally engaged in a mixed farming system where they grow food and cash crops and rear a few domestic animals and poultry and engage in small scale cottage industries or any other off-farm employment activities. Therefore, in view of the diversified interests of its members, a group should be concerned with almost all the activities in which its members have interests.

(e) Regular Meeting

Groups should hold regular meetings at least once in a fortnight to review progress of their on-going activities and also to review their plans for the future.

(f) Group Savings

A group saving scheme is an important aspect of group activities. It should be made compulsory that every member of group should contribute in a sharing fund regularly. The money shared should be used for advancing loans to needy members to meet their emergency and subsistence needs, thereby reducing their dependence on moneylenders or landlords. Resources of the sharing fund may also be used for expanding group activities.

(g) Group Organizers

People should not organise into groups unless they are talked to and convinced of the benefits to be derived from membership in groups. For this purpose, a group organizer is required. Group organizers should be energetic and motivated to work with disadvantaged and the poor. Group organizers must be willing to mix with the poor and so live with them. They must conduct socio-economic household surveys to identify people of similar status and interests for organising them into small homogeneous groups.

(h) Group Leaders

A group leader is to be selected from amongst the members of the group by consensus. Other members may also be assigned different responsibilities. Thus everybody may share the work of the group.

(i) Credit

As groups are organised around productive activities, the need for credit arises. Banking institutions should advance credit to members of small groups not on the basis of collateral but on the basis of collective guarantee of the group concerned. Alternatively, total land assets of all the members of a group may be used as collateral for loans to individual members for the purposes approved by the group concerned. Similarly collective loans may also be secured for collective and joint projects to be undertaken by groups.

(j) Associations

As several small groups are formed and as they are involved in several activities, it could be useful to share their experience to learn from each other's mistakes and success. Several small groups in a village or an area, therefore, may be federated into an association which can occasionally meet and discuss common problems of member groups. Such associations can also undertake, on behalf of their member groups, joint marketing of their products and procurement of inputs with a view to taking advantage of the economy of sale in production.

(k) Interest Group Cooperative

The association can then grow into a cooperative society fully controlled by the various interest groups. The board of directors of the Cooperative Society may be elected by representatives of its member groups or may be composed of group leaders serving on the board for a fixed term on rotational basis.

The formation of the association and its transformation into a cooperative society must not be hastened or forced in a structural or bureaucratic manner. The higher institutions should be allowed to gradually develop through the small groups. It is the smaller groups that are the most important and need to be the most viable institutional forums for mobilization of the poor, as evidenced by experience with small farmer and artisan development projects carried out in the country.

This frame-work for group organization is suggested because of the fact that rural masses do not visualise any benefit from Panchayati Raj Institutions at the present moment. If this framework is experimented and the masses get benefited from such organizations, they will start taking keen interest in Gram Panchayats' activities and in the course of the time the Gram Sabhas will automatically become the most active institutions of grassroot democracy. This will also help in building a homogeneous rural society based on common interests. Every individual will feel himself as the part of the system and the system will serve the general problems of the common masses on a commonly agreed programme.

When such type of Gram Panchayats are created for a village, the District Administration should take care of flow of funds for development works taken up by the Gram Panchayats. For this matter the District Administration may have two different administrative set up top from the District to Village Level i.e. Revenue Administration and Development Administration.

For Development Administration there should be separate organizations like DRDA and the Law and Order and Revenue Administration should be under the control of District Magistrate. At the Block level too the development activities may be taken care of by the B.D.O. and Law and Order and revenue administration may be under the supervision of circle officer.

It this model clicks and the Gram Panchayats and Gram Sabhas start functioning in right direction, in the gradual course of the time, we may think in terms of adopting three-tier model of Panchayati Raj Institutions.
